LOST SHERIFF AND HIS PRISONER FOUND!

ALONE WITH MANIAC

CAPTIVE

ALL NIGHT IN WOODS.

Officer with Edgar Sanborn Manacled to Him Wandered for Nine Hours Along the Merrimac---Nearly Dead from Exposure---There Were Fears That Sanborn Had Killed His Captor.

After wandering all night with a maniac and manacled prisoner in the dense woods that skirt the Merrimac outside of Lowell, Deputy Sheriff Joseph Fleetwood of New Jersey and Edgar Sanborn, his captive, were found this morning almost dead from the cold, nine miles from where they had started.

The search for the two men who disappeared yesterday afternoon, and who were sought by a posse of 100 policemen and citizens, continued through the night and up to an early hour this morning.

It is thought that the prisoner tried to escape the sheriff in the wild woods, with which he was perfectly familiar, but himself became bewildered.

The suffering of the two men must have been intense, and the experience of the sheriff lost in the woods with a prisoner whose mind was unbalanced was thrilling in the extreme.

Young Sanborn, the prisoner, is one of two brothers who a few years ago became victims of sympathetic insanity through hard study in their preparation for Harvard College.

After the two brothers, Edgar and Arthur Sanborn, became mental wrecks they were put in an asylum, from which later they were discharged as cured. Arthur returned to Billerica and Edgar went to New Jersey, where he was arrested on a charge of incendiarism and theft.

Sanborn induced the sheriff to accompany him into the woods under the pretense that he had hidden there some of the property it was charged he had stolen. Fleetwood and his prisoner started into the woods shortly after 4 o'clock yesterday, and, although the prisoner was manacled, it was supposed that he managed to free himself and attack his captor.

The territory covered by the man hunt is one of the wildest and most picturesque in New England, and has been the scene of many sensational and mysterious crimes. The woods are little travelled because of danger from treacherous morasses that spot them. A murder might be committed there and the body of the victim be hidden so that a discovery there might be a matter of weeks.

Edward Sanborn, who is thirty-two years of age, resided at East Billerica. He was arrested yesterday on an old charge of having set fire to and robbed a railroad station in New Jersey. Ellis H. Parker of the local police and Fleetwood started with the prisoner to the Billerica station. When they reached there Sanborn, who appeared cool and apparently in his right mind, made the proposition to go into the woods for the property. Parker, it was suggested, should stay at the station. He did so for two hours, and then, as the men did not return, he became alarmed and sent word to the police of Lowell. A posse was organized and the search began.

DEMOCRACY RALLIES FOR W. R. HEARST

Faneuil Hall Rings With Enthusiasm When the Real Issues of the Campaign Are Set Forth by Bay State Leaders.

In old and honored historic Faneuil Hall, whose walls echoed to the impassioned tones of Samuel Adams in Revolutionary days, and later to the eloquent words of Phillips, Garrison and Sumner as they successfully cried out against the oppression of the common people, last night was heard the bugle blast of true Democracy, as it rose clear and strong from the lips of speakers in the first great rally of the Hearst Labor League of Massachusetts.

The date of the opening mass meeting of the campaign was made to coincide with that of the inception of the BOSTON AMERICAN, and during the meeting the new Hearst newspaper was the recipient of many expressions of approval.

Long before the time for the meeting to be called to order the hall was crowded to the doors. When the chairman rapped for order there was not an available seat on the floor or in the gallery, and scores of people had to stand.

The audience was composed of well-dressed, thoughtful-looking men of middle age, with here and there a head silvered with age. In the gallery were a number of women, who manifested great interest in the proceedings, listened attentively to the speakers and were enthusiastic in their applause.

While the people are gathering a band that had been placed in the balcony discoursed lively airs. Promptly at 8 o'clock the meeting was called to order by Henry McMahon, President of the League. Mr. McMahon is the President of Typographical Union No. 13, and was the organizer of the American Federation of Labor in New England. He made a forcible speech, in which he declared that the choice of the League for President was William Randolph Hearst, the great champion of the labor cause.

Representative Hearst, in a letter written from Washington regretted that he was unable to be present at the meeting in person, as he desired to work and vote for the bill which has for its object the raising of the salaries of letter carriers. In this connection Mr. Hearst wrote:

"I sincerely hope that in these days of wage-cutting by the speculative trusts in the interest of watered stocks, the United States Govern-

"BAREFOOT LASS" AGAIN IS IN TOILS

Imprudent Prudence Makes Fourth Appearance in Court, but Gets Off

Prudence Simmons, long known to fame as the Barefoot Lass, has been in trouble again. But to-day she is safe at home, a kind-hearted judge releasing, despite her record of four times in the toils.

Prudence was arraigned in the Cambridge court, charged with drunkenness. She had nothing to say, but she was set free.

In all sorts of weather, in winter's snows and autumn's blows, as well as in the buoyant spring and the full leaved summer, she has scorned the emblems of woman's vanity, stockings and shoes, and the lovely Easter bonnet.

Barefooted and bareheaded, Prudence would imprudently his herself to unlovely streets, there to be folded in the strong arm of the law.

In peaceful Somerville she roamed, one cold, damp morning, hatless, shoeless and hoseless, but pretty and young and debonnair as Maud Muller, who raked the hay. Only, Prudence had not been raking hay. She declared she had been dining o'night with a Harvard professor.

Again, on Chelsea bridge, did the patrolman find Prudence, and lured her stationward. But she stood on the bridge at midnight and watched two moons rise over the city, while the breezes toyed with her unbonneted tresses and the cold pave passed the tremors through her unbooted tootsies.

For a third time, Prudence was discovered where prudence seldom lingers—on the coasting schooner, tied up at Central wharf. When the honest policeman found her Prudence laid the blame of her condition to drugs.

DIES UNABLE TO GET JOB.

Alone in his little room at No. 33 Lynde street, George Draper died, after an unsuccessful search for work. Draper came from Lowell, where his widow, Mrs. Hattie Draper, lives at 573 Broadway.

CZAR'S SOLDIERS FILL HOSPITALS AT HARBIN

ARMY DEMORALIZED—NEW CHWANG LOOKS FOR ATTACK BY JAP FLEET.

LONDON, March 22.—Advices from Harbin Junction to-day show that the Russian army there is in a deplorable condition. Many of the men—thousands it is believed—are ill and in the hospitals at Harbin. The men were in a wretched condition when they arrived.

Only 20,000 Russian troops have arrived at Harbin during the past forty days, according to a cable from the London Times correspondent. Of these only 4000 have been dispatched to Port Arthur, New Chwang and Mukden, and 2000 to Vladivostok.

Thirty-three military trains have reached Harbin since the outbreak of hostilities, and more than half of these brought only munitions of war and provisions.

There is great disorder at Harbin, where fortifications are being erected, and it is hoped that when that is remedied troops will arrive at the rate of 1,000 a day.

New Chwang Will Be Defended.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 22.—New Chwang will be defended by the Russians, it is announced here, despite all reports to the contrary. The attack is expected to be made within the next twenty-four hours. There are 20,000 Russians in the vicinity of New Chwang. Six siege guns have arrived from Port Arthur.

"The occupation of the towns of Anju and Pingyang by the enemy's infantry and artillery is confirmed. An increased movement of troops and transport on the road between Pingyang and Anju is noticeable.

"Thirteen of the enemy's transports recently unloaded at Chinampo.

"According to reports, there have been no preparations for landing on the coast of Coulpo (probably Kiulu) or opposite Kin-chow.

GUNS HEARD AT YIN-KOW.

LONDON, March 22.—A dispatch from Yin-Kow, the port of New Chwang, indicates the approach of a Japanese squadron.

Firing was heard off the coast, apparently about six miles to the southward. There were 14 shots. The morning was hazy and it was impossible to distinguish objects at sea. A report has reached there that two cruisers and five gunboats were off Kin-Chow yesterday.

"JAP" ARMY NEARS YALU

ST. PETERSBURG, March 22.—General Zhilinski, aide to Viceroy Alexieff, has sent an official telegram from Mukden telling of the occupation of Anju and Pingyang, northern Corea, by the Japanese army. He

"JAP" BARBER NAVAL HERO

By HELEN H. GARDNER,
Special Correspondent of the Boston American.

TOKIO, March 22.—The fact has just been made known that it was a Japanese barber who deserves the credit for the first naval victory of the Japanese at Port Arthur. This barber, who lived in Port Arthur, discovered that all the officers of the Russian fleet were to be ashore on the night of the attack, and notified the Japanese admiral. The barber was placed in the bow of the leading torpedo boat. When the boat approached the harbor it was challenged by the captain of the Russian guard boat. The barber answered him in the Russian language, giving the name of a Russian warship and its captain, and the Japanese fleet was allowed to proceed.

WOMAN, ILL, ON TRIAL FOR LIFE

Charged With Murdering Daughter's Baby, Lies in Cot Outside Courtroom.

OSWEGO, N. Y., March 22.—Mrs. Carrie Cairns is being tried to-day for the murder of her daughter's baby while she lies seriously ill on a cot in a room adjoining the trial court room in the county court house. Justice Miller decided that she was constructively present.

SAVES LIVES OF 3 CHILDREN

Brave Policeman Killam of the East Boston station will get a vacation besides public praise for stopping runaway horses at Sumner and Cottage streets, and saving from death or terrible injury three little girls who were on the crossing. The horses were drawing a heavy wagon, and came plunging down a hill at terrific speed when many children were going home from school.

The three little girls heard the horses flying down upon them and halted in bewilderment right in the track of danger. Killam rushed to the spot and grabbed a bridle. He managed to swerve the maddened beasts to one side and stop them, although dragged fifty feet. A throng of spectators cheered him when the horses were stopped.

WINS BOSTON TROPHY.

NASSAU, Bahamas, March 22—H. E. Denis, Bedford Springs, has captured his third golf trophy in a closely fought handicap tournament. It was a beautiful silver loving cup, presented by E. B. Pierce of Boston.

TEN FIREMEN OVERCOME BY DENSE SMOKE

Captain Kennedy Found Unconscious By His Men—Ladderman Gill Hurt

Ten firemen were overcome by smoke while fighting fire in the five-story building at Nos. 556, 558 and 560 Atlantic avenue early this morning. Capt. Michael J. Kennedy of Engine 25 was found unconscious on the fourth floor by his men, and Ladderman William H. Gill fell downstairs from the landing of an upper floor. Both men were taken to the Relief Hospital. The other firemen, who were dragged out of the building in a semi-conscious condition, revived in the open air and resumed duty. Kennedy and Gill remained at the hospital for an hour and then went home.

The firemen had a hard battle, and faced dense banks of blinding, suffocating smoke. The smoke was so thick that they had great difficulty in locating the flames, which were eventually found to be in the middle of the structure. The fire might have gained sufficient headway to destroy the big building but for automatic sprinklers. When the firemen arrived, they found that tons of water were pouring down upon paper and other goods, and that the mechanical fire quencher was doing effective work. There was a great quantity of wood in the building, and this and the paper in burning formed a very deadly smoke combination.

Among the concerns which occupy the premises are the Sparrell Print, the Wisdom Monthly, Francis Wiley & Co., Parson Bros. and Goodhue & Studley, wool dealers; J. H. Cunningham & Co., pipe dealers, and Rich, Reed & Atwood, trunk and valise manufacturers.

The loss is estimated at about $20,000.

SON BORN TO PRINCESS WHO SHOT ACTRESS

The Granddaughter of Emperor Francis Joseph Forgave Faithless Husband.

Special Cable to the American.

VIENNA, March 22.—Princess Windisch-Graetz gave birth to a son last night.

The princess is the granddaughter of the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria and the only child of the ill-fated Crown Prince Rudolph and the Belgian Princess, who is now the Countess Lonyay. On her marriage two years ago to Prince Otho von Windisch-Graetz, she took the oath renouncing all claim for herself and her descendants to the Austrian throne.

At her marriage she received from the Emperor a dowry which was in no way commensurate with the Prince's fortune, since he was a poor man.

To relieve popular interest in the Princess's connection in her shooting a stage beauty, who also found in her husband's royal quarters.

It was early in December of last year that the Princess, suddenly informed of the secret attachment of her husband for a stage actress, left her own apartments in the Palace at Prague with a loaded revolver, and, going to the apartments of the actress, found the Prince, forced her way past the valet, stationed to guard the door with his life, and, entering the rooms, found the Prince and the actress in company.

With a sneering epithet of "Beast" for the Prince, she levelled the revolver at the woman and shot her. Then she broke down. The woman was taken from the palace to her own apartments in the city and later recovered.

Since then her love for her husband has prevailed, and the couple are reconciled.

MASSACHUSETTS DEMOCRACY IN A GREAT MASS MEETING

ment, through its representatives, will set an example of decent treatment of faithful employes."

This sentiment called forth a hearty outburst of applause from the audience, as did the mention of Mr. Hearst's name by the various speakers.

The principal speaker of the evening was Hon. George Fred Williams, the idol of the Democracy of the Bay State. When he arose to make his address a united shout went up from the assemblage that almost raised the roof of the famous hall. The cheers and handclapping continued for almost two minutes. Mr. Williams spoke in his usually happy and effective manner and carried his audience with him in his every utterance.

"The 21st day of March, 1904," said Mr. Williams, "will be remembered long by the residents of New England. This morning a new child was born to us. A newspaper that will be loyal to Democratic principles arrived, heralded by the lifting of the crust of old New England. I welcome the BOSTON AMERICAN. It was a God-send to us, and I welcome its proprietor, the greatest journalist in the world, as the standard bearer who can carry the Democratic Party to victory."

Telling speeches were also made by John J. Fitzgerald, of Rhode Island; George W. Greene, of Rhode Island, and Congressman Van Duzer of Nevada.

Occupying seats upon the platform besides the speakers were Thomas Nolan, Ambrose Baker, Fred Rannigan, John N. Barry, William Cohen, William H. McSweeney, F. P. Curran, John F. O'Connor, Jeremiah J. Donovan, Charles D. Lewis, E. L. Pike, George P. Cooke.

WHIRLWIND CHEERS GREET G. F. WILLIAMS

Hon. George Fred Williams was received with a whirlwind of applause when he rose to speak, and his many telling points were greeted with cheers or laughter, according as they were serious or humorous. He said:

Mr. Chairman and Fellow Democrats: It is an inspiration to me to come here tonight under these auspices, the auspices of organized labor in the city of Boston, and it means something that Faneuil Hall is filled tonight to the doors, on the floor and in the gallery, when we are yet at a Winter temperature in politics. (Applause.)

For years it has been my hope and my confidence that the Democracy of Massachusetts should cast aside all of its semi-Republican leaders (cheers and applause), all of its compromising politicians (cries of "Good") and throw itself without reserve into the hearts and confidences of the laboring men and the people. (Applause.)

We came near this consummation in 1896, and should have succeeded but that we were basely betrayed by the men to whom we had given honors and to whom we had invited the confidence of the people (applause), and, Fellow-Democrats, here tonight we are not only gathered to speak for a man, but we are gathered to begin again the contest between the people of the Democratic party and the false men who call themselves Democrats and miscarried in their Republicanism. (Cheers and applause).

My friends, you do not realize today what the 21st day of March, 1904, means to the Democracy of New England. This morning a new child was born to us (cheers and applause); it was a newspaper that at last shall represent Democracy in its true shape and be loyal to Democratic principles. (Cries of "Good!" and applause.)

LIFTED NEW ENGLAND'S CRUST.

And it is no wonder that other generations in which the Democracy has had no mouth-piece in the city of Boston, and indeed no metropolitan mouth-piece in all New England, that this arrival should have been heralded in a lifting of the crust of New England. (Applause.)

I am glad that it came with a quiet earthquake. (Applause.) I hope it has shaken somewhat the bric-a-brac on the mahogany tables of the city of Boston (applause), but I tell you fellow-Democrats, that, possessed at last of an instrument of speech to the people of New England, this earthquake is but a silent tremor beside the cataclism that will come hereafter! (Cries of Good!" and applause.)

Why, brother Democrats, I have been in a trance all day (laughter); a Boston newspaper has actually said a kind word to me (laughter, cheers and applause), and I have been pinching myself and rubbing my eyes wondering whether I am actually awake, and, worse than this, I have been actually wondering whether I have not done something wrong to deserve it.

TWO KINDS OF DEMOCRATS.

My friends, there are two kinds of Democrats, that is to say, two kinds of men who call themselves Democrats. There is a kind of Democrat that has been prominent in our party councils for the last generation, and I know this kind of a Democrat well. He is willing to accept any office or honor at the hands of the people, but he is never willing to accept the verdict of the people if it does not happen to agree with his ideas. (Applause.)

Now, gentlemen, if I know what Democracy is, it is the rule of the majority (a voice, "Hurrah"; laughter), and men who will not abide by the will of the majority in a party, as in the Nation, are not entitled to leadership.

I do not deny any man's right to his own opinion. He has a right to vote as he is entitled to be; if he wants to be a Radical he is entitled to be; and he is not to be criticised for exercising his judgment and seeing as God has given him to see. (Applause.) But, my friends, we are now confronted with the proposition that we [illegible] place at the head of our party some [illegible] who has been at some time false to party, who has helped to defeat it, has betrayed it. Gentlemen, I am here to say that in my judgment the exercise of that discretion by any member of our party bars that man from being a leader in the party.

WILL TALK ON SPECULATION.

Later on I shall deliver to you in some form an essay upon the kind of speculation which puts $76,000 into a Democratic campaign for the purpose of getting possession of the Democratic party so that millions may be made out of the people of Boston by having a subservient set of Democratic legislators in our law-making body. (Applause.)

I can understand, gentlemen, when I hear the banking witness who has just left the stand testify that he got a fee of $250,000 for bringing about the gas combination, how it is that he appeared in the year 1902 for the first time as a contributor, and a liberal contributor, to the Democratic campaign fund.

It is a good speculation, my friends, to own a political party, and I wish to say here tonight that I protest against the misuse of the Democratic party by any set of speculators, no matter how respectable may be their names. I want the party in the service of the people yesterday, to-day and to-morrow, not to be bought by any man or any body of men—a party ready to do the bidding and will of the people at all times.

My friends, we enter this campaign under brighter auspices than any which the real Democracy of Massachusetts has for many a year. We have for the cause that you and I represent here tonight brighter prospects for victory in the State and Nation than we have ever had in opening a fight for the people in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. (Applause.)

I have noticed a large number of slates for candidates for the St. Louis convention, at large, from the State of Massachusetts, published in various newspapers, with the portraits of the candidates, and in publishing those pictures and those names they have made only one slip—it was a slight accident, of course—they did include one man, our good Mayor of Boston, who is known to have voted the Democratic ticket in the last 12 years. (Applause.)

I will ask you to look over the list, gentlemen, and you will find a list of men, not one of whom can say he voted the Democratic ticket in '96 and 1900.

Now, if the people of Massachusetts who call themselves Democrats want to send to St. Louis, to represent the Democracy of Massachusetts, Democrats of that type they are entitled to do it, but, gentlemen, they are not going to do it. (Applause.)

DEMAND A REAL DEMOCRAT.

I say here and now that there will be another slate with the names of our men upon that slate who will go to St. Louis in behalf of a real Democrat, and that is the Hon. William Randolph Hearst. (Great applause.)

I say this in fairness to the opposition because I do not want these gentlemen who are candidates at large to go about blindfolded, for I can tell them that the heads stalk behind (laughter and applause).

Gentlemen, it is a good thing to gather here in Faneuil Hall and meet the men who constitute the Democracy of Massachusetts, the real Democracy of Massachusetts, and I feel better here than I should feel if gathered around me were a lot of gentlemen who, if they had a professional guide, could not find their way from State street to Faneuil Hall tonight. (Laughter).

I believe that the candidacy of this man whom we are here to favor tonight opens up a new record for Democracy, not only in Massachusetts, but in the State of New England; it will make a new alignment of our forces, and will drive the false Democrats under cover, and that hereafter we shall feel right, here in the city of Boston, right, here in the State of Massachusetts, right, here in New England, upon the new foundations of Democracy, such as are represented by Mr. Hearst. (Applause).

I for one am pleased and proud to follow a man who can fill Faneuil Hall with members of the real Democracy, as his name has filled it here tonight. (Applause.)

I am proud to stand with a man who can arouse the enthusiasm of organized labor in the Commonwealth, not alone for what he has said and written, but for what he has done.

LIKE A TRAIL OF FIRE.

Looking across the country from here to the Pacific, this man's journalistic efforts are like a trail of fire, for everywhere we find the Democracy of the cities which he represents in his journalistic efforts revolutionized.

In Chicago today the public ownership of the street railways is the leading political issue, which could never have been without the powerful influence and support of his great journal. (Applause.)

San Francisco has elected a laboring man as Mayor of the city, with a new, liberal charter, neither of which things could have been accomplished without the sturdy support of this man, whom we are about to name as a candidate. (Applause.)

I want that same Democratic influence to come to Boston, and though it may cause some tears to be shed, in the main it will bring laughter and rejoicing. (Applause.)

It will give the laboring men of this State an opportunity of speech; it will give the politicians an ear to whom to listen in the rear of the Boston Public Library; it will call each and every one of our Democrats and bring us about us the real services of the people; and I say that journal welcome here today, as a God-send to the Democracy of Massachusetts (applause), and I tell the Democracy of that school, the greatest boss in all the world today, a welcome here in Faneuil Hall, the leader of Democracy, all to come in the Presidential campaign, the leader who shall carry us on to victory. (Cheers and applause).

HEARST EXTOLLED BY FITZGERALD

J. J. Fitzgerald, of Rhode Island, made an eloquent address. He said:

"Mr. Chairman and Fellow-Democrats: It is not such a far cry from Rhode Island to Massachusetts, and Rhode Island has much for which to thank Massachusetts. Were it not that our old friend, Roger Williams, was sent from Massachusetts on an exploring expedition, there probably would not have existed the flourishing commonwealth that now has the honor of being your neighbor State. As Massachusetts showed Roger Williams the road he should take, which he took, we feel that Rhode Island would consider the favor repaid were you to take the road she now has taken, which we believe leads to the establishment of real democracy in control of the affairs of this nation.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL.

Democracy in this campaign is fighting to restore and uphold the principles for which the fathers of this country fought. Chief among those principles and one of the best of them is that motto which has ever been emblazoned on Democracy's banner, "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none." That should be the guide of all our politicians. It is for Democracy to stand firmly and unequivocally upon the platform.

WHAT IS A SAFE MAN?

As to the platform, there seems to be almost a unanimity of opinion, but as to the candidate there seems to be many opinions. Some there are who claim that to appeal to the voters of this great land of ours we must present what they consider a safe and conservative man. As to the general meaning accorded these terms all agree, but as to the applications of them to the different candidates there arises a disagreement. It all depends on the side from which you view it.

Viewed from the side which desires to further entrench the trusts, a safe and conservative man is one who will leave the trust magnates safe in the enjoyment of their unjust privileges and will be conservative enough not to disturb the present prosperity which they, the trust magnates, enjoy.

Viewed from the standpoint of the people, those who are not the direct beneficiaries, and those who do not seek their favors, but who suffer from the extortion and oppression of these powerful combinations, a safe candidate means one in whose hands they can safely trust the task of relieving us of the burdens we now bear and conservative enough to go back to first principles of a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

If the Democratic party is sincere in its declarations, the last definition must be the one which their candidate must fit.

Of all the candidates yet presented in the Democratic party, which one fits this definition? For which one of them can you seek the endorsement of the people without fear of being charged with double dealing? With which one of them can the fight be made so that there will be no doubt as to the result should victory perch on our banner?

HEARST THE ONLY ONE.

I know of but one yet presented for our consideration about whose position on this great and paramount issue there is not a shadow of doubt, who by his public utterances and public efforts has striven incessantly to show the danger that is imminent, are, even should the present condition of affairs continue, one who has not only fought against them with words, but so far as his acts could go, has striven to curb some and abolish others. This man is the gentleman whose nomination the majority of the Rhode Island delegates would vote and work for in the next Democratic Convention, the Honorable William Randolph Hearst, of New York.

What men and what papers seem to be the most disturbed over the idea of his candidacy? Are they the men and papers who hope and wish for the triumph of true Democracy? Are they the men or papers which are really opposed to the present iniquitous condition of affairs? Oh, no! Their only fear is the triumph of the true democracy and the possibility that their employers will lose their unjust privileges, and their dearest wish is that the Democracy will nominate such a candidate that the victory will be theirs, whichever party wins. I hope the Democracy of the nation has not come to be so feeble-minded and so subservient that it must seek direction and enlightment from sources which are diametrically opposed to that for which our party stands.

Democracy, in this campaign, cannot win by any half measures, cannot win by mere-ly opposing the Republican party and its acts. It must convince the people that it will do all in its power to remedy the evils that now exist, place our business interest on an honest basis, remove unjust privileges, open again the door of opportunity and give equal rights to all, and no.inate as its candidate one whom the people can trust to do all in his power to fulfil these promises, nominate the Honorable William Randolph Hearst of New York.

CHAIRMAN McMAHON OPENS THE MEETING

Chairman McMahon was greeted with enthusiasm when he opened the meeting. His speech was as follows:

Fellow Citizens, Ladies and Gentlemen: In opening this splendid meeting I propose to make but a few brief remarks. We have on the platform here a number of very prominent speakers whom I know you are anxious to hear—men who are thoroughly in touch with the various questions and issues of the day—exponents of the principles of that true Democracy which stands for liberty, justice and the equality of all mankind.

I know of no more fitting spot from which to expound those principles than from the platform of this grand old hall, whose walls have rung [illegible] days gone by with burning words of patriotism, denunciation of oppression in all its forms and encouragement to the people to maintain the hard-earned freedom of our institutions.

We are on the eve of a Presidential election, and it behooves us to consider carefully the many questions which confront us that we may, when the proper time arrives, cast our ballots intelligently.

A crisis in the affairs of one country seems to be close at hand. Our free institutions and our sacred rights as citizens seem to be in danger. Criminal trusts and combinations are forming on every side and are struggling to secure absolute control of our government.

ADDRESSING THE DEMOCRACY ASSEMBLED IN FANEUIL HALL.

R. HEARST EXPOSES AND DENOUNCES THE TRUSTS

e Points Out the Dangers That Menace Business Men, Skilled Mechanics and Workers in General Throughout the Nation From the Methods of Criminal Combinations of Capitalists.

ttacks the Evils of Watered Stock and the Efforts of the Trusts to Cut Down Wages and Lengthen the Hours of Work, and Calls on Democrats to Combat Them.

OMMITTEE ON LABOR, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH 21, 1904.

GENTLEMEN: I thank you at the same time for your very good invitation to address you, as well as for the extremely friendly spirit in which you have received the appearance of my Boston newspaper. I hope that the confidence shown in your warm welcome will not be disappointed. I promise in behalf of the BOSTON AMERICAN that it will at least conscientiously try, as my other newspapers have done, to represent and defend the interests of a majority of the people.

You have suggested that I should discuss the trust question in addressing you. No question could be more important at this moment—either to the business man, who finds his opportunities absorbed, his field taken away from him, or to the skilled mechanic who realizes more and more keenly that the trust organizers intend in the last instance to extract dividends for watered stocks from the wages of their workingmen.

I believe that the workers of this country and all the citizens would be amazed if they should realize, as I have been forced to realize, the absolutely frank attitude of the trusts and their representatives toward the labor question.

But a few days ago the question of hours and wages was under discussion before the Labor Committee of the House of Representatives. I am a member of that committee. I confess I was unprepared for the calm way in which those speaking in behalf of great industrial trusts confessed their desire and their intention to have low wages and long hours.

MAIN PURPOSE OF TARIFF.

We have all been accustomed to hear during political campaigns very fine utterances to the effect that the main purpose of the tariff is to protect workmen and promote high wages.

I wish that every worker in this country could have heard the report of the trusts speaking to the congressional representatives of the people and declaring emphatically: "We must have lower wages and longer hours in this country in order that we may compete with manufacturers abroad. We must get our men to work as cheaply and as long as they do in Europe, in order that we may compete in the European markets."

What becomes of the great boast about a tariff in the interest of the American workmen, when those who control the tariff and control industry declare that their purpose is to control prices here, and by lowering wages and lengthening hours to compete for the lower priced foreign markets after exploiting the high-priced home market to its fullest extent?

According to these trust managers, gentlemen, the mission of this republic is no longer to make the body of the people happy, prosperous, well paid and well treated. We are now to consider not the welfare of those who work here at home, but the desire of the few enormously rich trust managers to dump their surplus products on European markets and, with that end in view, to bring American labor down and American hours up to the level of European industrial competition.

This representative of the trusts, speaking before the Labor Committee of the people's representatives, in response to a question which I put to him on behalf of my constituents, said that short hours and high wages might be lengthened as soon as profits should become sufficiently large to justify it. I asked him when he thought that time would come, but got no satisfactory answer. I should like to ask you representatives of skilled labor a question in simple arithmetic:

The Steel Trust has recently reduced the wages of its employes by more than seven millions of dollars per year. It did this in order to pay dividends on watered stock of purely fictitious values.

HAD NINETY MILLIONS SURPLUS.

And when the Steel Trust reduced the wages of its workmen by more than seven millions it had in its treasury, according to its own official figures, a surplus of ninety millions of dollars.

Here is the mathematical problem:

If one trust, with ninety millions surplus, is compelled to reduce its workmen's wages seven millions a year, how big a surplus would that trust require in order to raise its workmen's wages?

The fact is, as I endeavored to show to that same accredited trust representative, that increased profits are by no means devoted to the payment of increased wages or to the bettering of conditions through shorter hours.

If profits increase, more stock is issued. The profits are capitalized to the fullest possible extent, and water is added, besides. Normal times come, times which ought to mean great and sufficient prosperity to everybody, and because this watered stock has been put out, and because the holders are clamoring for dividends, the wages of the workmen are cut to supply those dividends. Instead of being permitted to share in the increased profits, they are punished because of the increased profits, punished in order to keep up artificially an artificial standard of prosperity.

It is hardly necessary among intelligent wor men to discuss the nature and the results of trust organization and trust governmen. Every American knows in what direction the development of trust control of the nation is carrying us.

A child might understand that through criminal trusts every organization of a national character must be inevitably injurious to labor as to general business. The object of a monopoly is to fix the prices of the products and to control wages and hours.

RAISES PRICES; LOWERS WAGES.

By controlling the product the trust is enabled to increase prices. It does this and injures the entire republic.

By controlling the labor market in a given direction, the trust is enabled to put down wages, and this it does promptly when it needs extra millions for any purpose, as we have seen in the case of the steel trust.

I am glad to discuss the trust question with organized workmen, for I feel that the main reliance of the people in fighting organized trust criminality must be a reliance upon the organized manhood of the nation's labor unions.

Organization can only be effectually met and fought by organization and it is a very fortunate thing for this country in my opinion that the organization of labor has kept pace with the organization of the trust and that the country has these labor organizations to depend upon in the coming fight against criminal monopoly of public necessities and of national industries. The trusts, it is true, have on their side the control of capital, control of prices, the giving or withholding of employment.

But the unions, the body of the people, on their side have numbers with the unlimited power of the ballot; they have justice and the more peculiar quality of keeping up the fight and of never giving in that is found only on the side of right.

To sell their products for as high a price as possible, to pay the producers as low a price as possible—such are the established purposes of the criminal trusts.

Through the raising of prices the purchasing power and the demand for labor is curtailed. Through reduction of wages the purchasing power of the masses is cut down again, consumption decreased and the demand for labor cut down, because labor itself can buy less.

ROBBED BY SPECULATIVE TRUSTS.

The organization and flotation of speculative trusts take the savings of the people from savings banks and from legitimate investments to the pockets of the speculators. The individuals robbed of their savings through shipyard bubbles, steel trust swindles and other criminal conspiracies must set to work to save in every direction, to make back what they have lost. In this way again the buying power of the community is again decreased and again the demand for labor suffers.

Such criminal enterprises as the Shipyard Trust, ending in collapse, deprive the thousands of mechanics of work and destroy industrial conditions.

I believe that every thoughtful American realizes two facts, first, that the distribution of wealth is as important to the nation's welfare as the production of wealth.

And second, that the formation and operation of criminal trusts tend inevitably to limit the distribution of wealth, curtailing consumption simultaneously with the raising of prices, the control and lowering of wages.

It is not the money accumulated in vaults or held to the credit of enormously rich individuals that means prosperity for the people.

A prosperous people is one in which the greatest possible number of its individuals are prosperous. This country has been prosperous beyond all others, because its average of prosperity has been so high. Ours has been a nation in which all have shared the national good fortune.

The aim of the trusts is to change that, to replace a nation of prosperous citizens by an oligarchy of millionaires or billionaires, controlling wages, prices, production and distribution solely according to their individual, narrow and short-sighted wishes.

CONSIDERS LETTER CARRIERS.

I hoped to have the pleasure of addressing you personally, but I am unable to leave Washington because there is coming up in Congress the post office appropriations bill, which contains a provision to improve the wages of letter carriers of the country. I want the satisfaction of at least casting my vote as a Congressman for that part of the bill. I sincerely hope that in these days of wage-cutting by the speculative trusts in the interest of watered stocks, the United States Government, through its representatives, will set an example of decent treatment of faithful employes.

Fortunately, the trusts do not quite own the United States as yet. They have not succeeded in watering the United States bonds. Those bonds are good. The nation's credit is good. We can well afford to pay fairly the men who do our work. The Government has not got to take the interest for its bonds out of its workmen's wages.

I thank you again for your invitation to address you, and I suggest, if you will permit me to, that every American citizen should devote earnest thought to this great trust question, and that he should especially emphasize its importance in his discussion with friends.

The trust problem has got to be met and solved by the united body of working Americans—by which I mean those that work for a living in business or at trades as distinguished from those who exploit the people for a living through criminal evasion of law and monopolistic combinations.

GEO. FRED WILLIAMS AT THE FANEUIL HALL MEETING

G. W. GREENE BRINGS RHODY'S GREETINGS

There was a great demonstration when the Hon. George W. Greene, ex-Mayor of Woonsocket, R. I., and present national committeeman from "Little Rhody," started to address the vast assemblage. He said he hadn't come to Boston to make a lengthy speech, but merely to bear the congratulations of the Democrats of Rhode Island to the next President of the United States on the birth of the BOSTON AMERICAN.

"We have fought the fight in Rhode Island," he said, "and we won the battle for self-respect in Democracy. The spirit of the Democrats in Massachusetts is against the reorganized party in the party by those who in 1896 and 1900 led us to slaughter and gave the victory to our opponents.

"We favor for President of the United States that fearless and peerless champion of true Democracy, William Randolph Hearst."

Dr. Koch Coming.

Famous Consumption and Asthma Specialist Will Be In Boston Thursday.

DR. EDWARD KOCH.

Dr. Edward Koch, the well-known consumption specialist and inventor of the Koch Inhalation, will arrive in Boston Thursday morning, March 24, on a visit to the Boston office of the Koch Lung Cure, 561 Boylston St.

Dr. Koch's invention of the wonderful Koch Inhalation apparatus has made his name known all over the land. By means of this great invention, the germ-destroying Koch "Tuberculine" and healing antiseptic oils are combined and vaporized so that the curative vapors may be easily breathed into the lungs and air pipes, spreading their healing oils over the sore spots and inflamed tissues of patients suffering from consumption and asthma. By this means the germs are killed, the sore spots are healed and the diseased coatings of the lungs and air tubes are loosened and thrown off. The cause of the disease being removed, the patient steadily improves until a complete cure is effected.

Dr. Koch says: "Nothing but a direct application of healing, vaporized medicinals, antiseptics and germicides can cure disease. Drugs will effect a cure of any lung disease, and these medicines can be applied only by inhaling them in a vaporized state. The lungs constitute an air cavity and can be reached medicinally only by medicated air. I will continue to treat by inhalation or external consumption can be cured by these healing, curative vapors that reach the seat of disease, often after they are with the Koch generating Tubercoline."

After years of careful observation and examining the sputum of eleven hundred cases, I am convinced that four-fifths of all the deaths charged to consumption are really catarrhal troubles associated with dyspepsia, which is brought on from eating food that cannot be digested, goes directly to the lungs, and consequently does not disarrange the stomach or impair the digestion. The treatment is the same in all cases if desired."

Dr. Koch will arrive in Boston Thursday morning, March 24th, and will be here for several days. He will be glad to examine and consult free with any sufferer from consumption, asthma, bronchitis or catarrh who will call to see him at the Boston Institute of the Koch Lung Cure, 561 Boylston St.

Dr. Koch would be particularly glad to see any of his many former patients in Boston who will have time to call upon him during his stay in this city.

RINGING RESOLUTION FOR MR. HEARST ADOPTED.

Following is the resolution adopted with rising cheers at the great Faneuil Hall meeting indorsing the candidacy of William Randolph Hearst for the Presidency:

Whereas, William Randolph Hearst, member of Congress from New York City and editor of many great newspapers devoted to the cause of humanity in general, and workingmen in particular, is a candidate for the high office of President of the United States; and

Whereas, no sturdier, persistent and courageous champion of labor exists in our country, and no man more deserving the support of the people on broad American lines is now in public life; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the citizens of Massachusetts, in meeting assembled in Faneuil Hall, Boston, That we express our hearty indorsement and support of the candidacy of William Randolph Hearst for President of the United States, and that we will work untiringly to the end that a delegation be sent from this State pledged to his interests.

WEST FOR HEARST SAYS VAN DUZER

from the enthusiasm, the inspiration at this meeting, it means that in little less than one year, March 4, 1905, there will be in Washington as President of the United States a candidate for the high office of President of the United States; and

Whereas, this candidate is a man who is in full sympathy with the people of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey and a few others. (Laughter and applause.) And there is no candidate that can show the same elements of strength that William Randolph Hearst can.

Why is it that a substituted press through out America is fighting William Randolph Hearst? Why is it that the Republicans generally are trying to create discord and trying to prejudice the minds of the people and mislead them, just as they did in '98 and 1900? Because they see in William Randolph Hearst a champion of the common people and a champion of a modern Democracy.

TRUSTS STRONGER THAN EVER.

The campaign of 1903 involves many things of wide importance to the people of this country and organized labor. The question is whether the trusts are to continue in power, and of course the Republicans will say to you, "Why, look at the merger's case." I want you to ask what President Roosevelt is going to do with the Beef Trust, the Oil Trust or, all the different trusts that affect the prices of the things you wear and the things you eat. He has not starved the great machinery of the government against the Beef Trust yet nor against the Oil Trust, or against any of the trusts that mean higher cost and increased living in this country. If you are in earnest about breaking up the growing power of the trusts, you will have to elect a man as President who will stand on a platform which means something.

It has been a pleasure to meet the people of Boston in this splendid hall, and I wish to say to you that throughout the West, where we know the work of William Randolph Hearst, we are with him almost to a man. We know the Hearst family on the Pacific coast; we know that his father was one of the greatest characters in the mining communities of the West. We know that his mother today stands out as one of the leading ladies of this land, who has done more for charity and for education and for uplifting the masses and for helping the struggling young men and women of the Pacific coast than any woman who ever entered into the history of the Pacific coast.

HEARST'S GREAT STRENGTH.

So far as the Hearst family is concerned the connection of their name with the Government of the United States would mean a great deal for the happiness and prosperity of the American people. California will support William Randolph Hearst because the people know him. Nevada will support William Randolph Hearst because we who labor in the States of Utah, Colorado and South Dakota

HENDRICKS CASE GOES TO U. S. COURT

Will Decide Whether Child is Illegally Detained at House of Angel Guardian.

With mother and father fighting for his custody, little Tommy Hendricks appears in court again to-day. This time the United States bench will decide whether he is illegally detained at the House of the Angel Guardian in Roxbury. In the State Supreme Court, Judge Barker decided, after Mrs. Agnes Mary Hendricks, the child's mother, had fainted, that the boy should be remanded to the House.

Mrs. Hendricks says the boy was taken from her home in Brooklyn by his father, Dr. Charles C. Hendricks, and that she searched for weeks before she learned where he was. She applied for a writ of habeas corpus, and the child was taken to the state court. When she failed there the agonized mother applied through her lawyers, Francis W. Russell, of New York, and Wilbert Mozgrage, of this city, to the United States Circuit Court for a habeas corpus writ, and the order to show cause was made returnable at 10 o'clock this morning by Judge Lowell.

As the boy's home is said to be in New York, the application to Judge Lowell is based upon the ground of diverse citizenship. The writ is issued against Brother Jude of the House, who in the state court testified that the boy was brought there by a man who was unknown to him. At the House, the boy is known as Thomas Connolly.

Brother Jude was much incensed at the report that the body of the little lad was scarred and had the child examined by Drs. E. T. Galligan and W. O. McDonald of Roxbury. In a written report, they state that the boy is in good physical condition.

Dr. Hendricks, who has been sleeping at Chester, Vt., which also is said to be the residence of Laura Bigger, the actress, arrived in this city last night. He came to fight the efforts of his wife to obtain possession of their child. Dr. Hendricks called at the House of the Angel Guardian last night, but did not see his child, who had been put to bed.

"I am going to fight this case to the finish," said Dr. Hendricks. "My wife is unjust when she says that I am unfit to be the custodian of my child. Neither is it true that I am a fugitive. My wife has no case against me. Since we separated I have paid her $80 a month, but she wants to put me in jail. Mrs. Hendricks wouldn't have found out where the child was but for a servant whom I had discharged."

HUB LEADERS FORM A MASS. HEARST CLUB

It Is Destined to Have a Strong Influence on State Sentiment.

The avalanche for Mr. Hearst that is sweeping the State manifested itself in this city at a meeting in the Revere House last night, where the Massachusetts Hearst Association was organized under the leadership of Francis P. Curran, of Cambridge, and other sterling Democrats.

Former Representative Charles A. Dean, of Wakefield, who is acting executive clerk of the State committee, eloquently favored the candidacy of Mr. Hearst and, after other leaders who have strong political following had been heard along the same line, it was decided to form a permanent organization.

"It is," declared Former Representative Dean, "the privilege and birthright of every American citizen to exercise his own judgment in political matters. That is why I am here. I am for Hearst."

Will Have Strong Influence.

The Massachusetts Hearst Association already has a notable membership and will exercise great influence in every city, town, village and hamlet in the State. Among those present were:

Mayor John P. Feeney of Woburn, H. Gerry Brown of Brockton, John O'Gara of Spencer, Charles D. Lewis of Framingham, William A. Davenport of Greenfield, who was the Democratic candidate for the Senate in that district last fall; Representatives Davis of Salem and Chrystal of North Adams, Lot F. McNamara of Haverhill, Thomas F. Mannix of Colrasse, Philip Tworoger of Boston, Philip J. Doherty of Boston, ex-Senator Arthur Harrington of Boston, John O'Connor of Everett and Councilman William F. Murray, Jr., of Boston.

Curran for President.

The permanent organization of the association is as follows:

President, Francis P. Curran, Cambridge; treasurer, Charles D. Lewis, South Framingham; secretaries, John F. O'Connor, Everett, and Thomas Mannix, Cohasset. Executive committee by congressional districts: 1st district, William Davenport, Greenfield; 2d district, Benjamin Cook, Northampton; 3d district, Dr. Joseph A. Smith, Worcester; 4th district, John J. Dervin, Gardner; 5th district, Dr. John T. Cahill, Lawrence; 6th district, Andrew H. Patten, Danvers; 7th district, Dennis A. Tirrell, Chelsea; 8th district, John P. Feeney, Woburn; 9th district, Alderman James H. Doyle, Boston; 10th district, David M. Owens, Boston; 12th district, James M. HEARST WINS OUT AT LYNN Olney Boom in the Shoe Town Quickly Exploded—Williams Favored as Delegate.

The strength of the sentiment among Massachusetts Democrats for the nomination of William Randolph Hearst for President was made plain yesterday at other gatherings than the great mass meeting in Faneuil Hall. The City of Lynn was heard from in unmistakable terms, and Democrats from all over the State assembled in Boston to prepare for a battle which will be fought by Hearst men in every ward in every city and town in the Commonwealth. The most enthusiastic and confidence were displayed at each gathering.

In Lynn, resolutions calling for the election of Hon. George Fred Williams as a delegate-at-large to the St. Louis National Convention were adopted by an overwhelming vote at a meeting of the Democratic City Committee.

After John A. O'Keefe's substitute resolutions, which was intended to serve in favoring the Olney boom, had been laid upon the table, the Williams resolution was adopted by a vote of 1 (only) against 14 (fourteen, and then made unanimous. The vote to indorse Collins, Gaston and Carroll as delegates-at-large was defeated.

"We are for Hearst," it was said, "and believe in a united Hearst delegation."

DEAD SINGER FROM BOSTON?

The body of William H. Murphy, a popular singer of Chicago, and who was supposed to have relatives in Boston, awaits a claimant in the Cook County Morgue, Chicago.

Murphy is believed to have belonged in Charlestown. He was forty-one years old, about five feet seven inches tall and had a sandy beard. He is said to have been a singer in Boston before he went West. It is rumored that he has a brother a member of the Boston police force, and Superintendent Pierce is trying to find if this is true.

Unless his relatives or friends claim the body it will be buried by the health authorities of Chicago.

SON'S DISGRACE KILLS MOTHER

DES MOINES, Ia., March 22.—Charles W. Graves, awaiting trial on a charge of wife-murder, was released from jail to attend the funeral of his mother, who died of a broken heart.

Accompanied by two deputy sheriffs, the prisoner was permitted to gaze on his mother's face. He declared that while he was not a murderer, those who had caused his arrest were indirectly murderers of his mother.

His step-daughter furnished evidence on which the grand jury returned an indictment against him that he had choked his wife to death and then burned the body to give the appearance of accidental death.

TENTH OF POPULATION INSURED IN COMPANY

Metropolitan Issues Statement Full of Striking Facts.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. issues a statement of its business in 1903, presenting an array of figures that shows impressively the intimate relations between this institution and the whole people. In one item alone an interesting fact is stated. The number of policies in force on the last day of the year was more than 7,500,000, showing that one person in every ten of the population of the United States is insured in this company.

The company has paid to and invested for its policy holders since organization over $238,800,000, or $80 a minute during every working day of the year.

Every day in the year 339 claims were paid; every day in the year more than 9,000 new policies were written. At the end of every day in the year the company's assets were more than $50,000 greater than in the morning. Its total assets at the end of the year were more than $105,000,000. Its total income for the one year 1903 was over $49,000,000.

The company's income for the year 1883 was a little over $3,000,000; for 1893 a little over $15,000,000; for 1903 over $49,000,000; its surplus since 1883 has increased from about $627,000 to over $10,000,000. When we come to the amount of outstanding insurance at the end of the year we pass the billion mark. The exact sum is $1,342,381,437.00.

A concern like the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company is, of course, a business organization, but it is one in which all of its policy holders are bona fide partners. "A company of the people, by the people and for the people"; one that has known how to gain and how to justify the confidence of the whole community.

Dear Sir—Years of the 19th at hand inquiring if the glasses you made for me are satisfactory, and what to say that they are, so far, proved to be of great help to me in my work, and I am glad to say that I can fill up with ease, and I also would take pains to put head if I used my eyes to any extent, but since I wore the glasses this trouble has completely disappeared, and the glasses have not hurt as though I had a pair of new eyes. I cannot say too much for your skillful manner in which you attended to recommending anybody to, but will be troubled with their eyes. Yours very sincerely, William Davis, Jr., 126 Chestnut st., Roxbury, Boston.

Dear Dr. Ingraham: March 30, 1903.
Having received your letter in regard to my eyes, will drop you a few lines to let you know that I am getting along quite well. Now I can study my lessons with much more ease than I could before I wore the new prescription. Without them I could not tell what to do. There is another classmate about my size who is in need of glasses and thinks of going to see as I told him all about you. Maybe he will call on you and get up again as soon as possible, but I have no fault to find with the glasses, they suit me fine, and I would not like to be without them. I don't think I can write any more this time, so will close. Yours truly, Louis Smith, Ute, Mansfield.

THEM SOMETHING INTERESTING HAS HAPPENED AND IS BEING TOLD IN THE AMERICAN---LOOK OUT FOR THEM

Inside Gossip of Boston's Smart Set

By the Chaperon.

IN spite of all the details chronicled regarding Mrs. "Jack" Gardner and the doings at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, it seems a bit queer that the domestic side of her life has not been publicly aired to any extent. With a large number of servants at her command, both at her winter home and her suburban residence in Brookline, she is practically her own housekeeper. It is almost a daily occurrence with Mrs. Gardner to go through the larder herself. She allows nothing to be wasted and is constantly on the lookout for a supply of the most palatable food.

It is no unusual thing to find Mrs. Gardner at one of the Massachusetts Avenue markets—and not a particularly fashionable one—discussing the merits of a roast. She invariably drives to market in her modest depot wagon with one horse, her driver being in the simplest livery. It seems absurd that because a woman has millions at her command the average person should fancy her to be ridiculously extravagant.

Mrs. "Jack" is often seen walking or reducting to the plebeian means of transportation offered by the electric cars. If she cannot carry out her day's programme with four or five horses in her stables, she does a pleasant sort of penance by resorting to the cars. A few months ago Mrs. Gardner walked in a pouring rain to Huntington Avenue, three blocks from her magnificent house, and boarded a car for one of the theatres. The publication of the fact caused a bit of a sensation.

Of absorbing interest is the announcement that Miss Lena Little, the well-known vocalist, will give a song recital at the Gardner palace on Saturday. With Mrs. Proctor, Mrs. Gardner, after a former occasion of the same sort at which Miss Little appeared, was severely criticized because the tickets were placed at what was considered an extravagant price. She was accused of not being considerate of others, who, though less fortunate financially, were true lovers of good music. The truth, however, was that the price was put at a rather unusual figure for the benefit of Miss Little, of whom Mrs. "Jack" is so great an admirer that the singer is constantly with her during the winter, and spends much time at her home in Brookline in the summer. Generally in one of Mrs. Gardner's strongest points, although comparatively few persons know it.

The question arose a day or two ago in the foyer of the Tremont Theatre, prior to the curtain's ringing up on Miss Nance O'Neil's performance of "Meg Merrilies," how it was that there were so many children in the audience, considering that the play of Guy Mannering offers no especial attraction for the youngest members of the family, unless they set "Meg" confused with "Old Mother Goose." Among the prominent persons in the audience were Col. John Thayer and his wife, with their two young daughters, and Mr. Harrison Gray Otis, with his young son. A witty solution of the situation was finally reached by a gentleman of many years who is noted for his wittiolisms. He has never should forget how his hair stood on end (he has none now) at Miss Lotte Cushman's wonderful performance of the "old hag," and he wanted his son to enjoy the same privilege before it was too late.

Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth, of this city, who is among the fashionables enjoying the Winter at the National Capital with her husband, gives a musical tonight at her residence in Washington in connection with the Polyhymnia Society, the smartest musical organization of the city, and of which she is the head. Society in general will be welcomed, the proceeds to go to the "Holiday House Fund of the Girls' Friendly." To-morrow evening the same programme is to be given by invitation exclusively, the cards of which bear that absorbing word "Supper."

John Drew has the distinction, here at least, of being one of the most popular of the theatrical world among the most exclusive of the set. He is always put up at the Somerset Club, as well as the Tavern Club, and is a warm friend of "Tim" Adamowski, who is a familiar figure at the latter club. Mr. Drew is intimate with the young Curtis Guilds—the Lieutenant-Governor's family, who hardly ever fail to entertain him on his visits here, as well as with "Harry" Burnham, formerly one of the officers of the Somerset Club, and his brother "Billy" Burnham and "Harry" Otis.

Many of the smart set are enjoying the privilege of advanced study of the Italian language and literature through the "Cercle Italiano," which had a particularly interesting programme for to-day. Count Campello, the former Italian consul, is at the head of the club, which meets at the Hotel Vendome. Mrs. Gardner, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. William Endicott, Jr., Mrs. Howard M. Ticknor and Mr. Ashton Willard are among the members. The club last season had the Italian Ambassador, Signor Mayor des Planches, as its guest, and, through the personal interest of Mr. Willard, the clever writer, also enjoyed the presence of Eleanora Duse, most famous of Italian actresses, at one of its meetings.

MISS CALLA AS PAINTED BY JORBERT.

PARIS, March 22.—Miss. Gladia Calla of Boston, is achieving notable successes as a hostess here, many titled and distinguished residents of Paris having been entertained by her during the season. At her latest dinner party she had as guests the Marquis and Marquise de Freysen, Count and Countess de Marchina, Prince Ghika, Count de Bernis and the Countess de Bonneval.

Miss Calla, who is but twenty-two years old, won the hearts of the Parisians last Spring, when her picture was painted by Jorbert.

Her betrothal to Count de Reynac, a member of the Faubourg St. Germain set, has recently been announced. Baroness von Orendorf, her aunt and guardian, says that "it is a love match, pure and simple."

Miss Calla is an American by birth, but a Parisienne by education. She is possessed of a sweet and powerful voice, and until she met Count Reynac, had thought of making an effort to win fame on the stage. Her father was an Italian, but her mother was American.

Baroness von Orendorff is the widow of a former German ambassador to Russia. She maintains establishments both in Washington and Paris, and is well known at all the capitals of Europe.

SULLY OFFERS 40 ON DOLLAR

NEW YORK, March 22.—Daniel J. Sully & Co., it is understood has offered to a conference of creditors 40 per cent in cash on claims and 60 per cent in notes covering two years, and that there was a difference of opinion in regard to the acceptance of the offer.

At the meeting fully 80 man were present, among them being Charles G. Gates, John C. Latham, R. J. Solis, W. D. Springs of J. H. Parker & Co., the latter said to be the largest creditor of Sully's firm; Henry Bentz and George Bailey.

KILLED BABE SHE RESCUED

Special by Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, March 22.—Clasping in her arms her 2-year-old baby girl, Mrs. Antonio Mielkip, wrapped her up tightly in shawls and ran from her home at No. 178 Christie street, which was on fire.

When she removed the shawls she found that in her anxiety to save her baby from the smoke she had killed it by suffocation. This discovery nearly drove her insane, and it took two policemen to prevent her from killing herself.

COLLINS TALKS OF NEXT MAYOR

"The next Mayor of Boston will be a Democrat, backed by the Democratic organization," is a statement credited to Mayor Collins by a dispatch from Hot Springs, Va. Mayor Collins, with ex Mayor Matthews and Judge Norris of Boston, is at the resort for a rest, but politics follows here just the same. He declines to say whether he will be a candidate for a third term. Answering a question on this line, he said:

"I am here for rest, and I am not here to talk politics or business. We don't elect a mayor in Boston until December, 1905, and it will be time enough to talk about candidates one year from now."

EAST BOSTON TOURNAMENT

Lively interest is being manifested in the coming house tournament of the East Boston Catholic Association. Some of the most prominent business and social people of the district, are to compete at bowling, pool and billards. Tyne, who won the individual pool championship in the Catholic League series, which just closed, will probably capture the prize, a handsome cue. Winters is the most promising aspirant for the billiard honors.

JUDAS MAN FOR WALL STREET

CHICAGO, March 22.—Dr. P. W. Gunsaulus of the Armour Institute asserts that Judas would have been an ideal Wall street operator.

"Judas was a man who knew the value of a dollar," continued Dr. Gunsaulus. "That was his weakness. Judas belonged to a commercial life. He would have been a bright and shining light in Wall street. He sold Christ for thirty pieces of silver—the price of a slave.

"The thing that raised Judas was jealousy. He thought he knew more than any one else about business; he was resentful, peddling the funds and unable to do as he pleased. His difficulty was his deceit. He used his power, his jealousy, his conceit, and persisted in having his own way at the cost of the life of Christ. Then he hanged himself."

3000 MILES FOR GOO.

Although Havana is but 150 miles from San Domingo, Andres Bengel, a Spaniard, had to come to Boston on the steamer Bones in order to get from the latter to the former place. When he reaches the Cuban capital, he will have gone 3000 miles to reach there.

ENTERTAINED 2080.

Two thousand and eighty poor women, girls, boys and babies were entertained at the Seashore Home at Beechmont and the Farm for Boys on Lake Massapoag, Sharon, during 1903, according to the report of Superintendent Rev. M. R. Deming, of the Boston Institute Seashore Home, presented at the tenth annual meeting yesterday.

SIMMONS PITIES THE DRUNKARDS

Rather than wishing to persecute the broken man, Judge Emmons is really inclined to sympathize with him, whatever the staggerer may have hitherto been inclined to think. The chairman so stated to the Boston Baptist Bethel. "He also said he had had little or no idea of what was going on in the city until he had left the bench and retired life of a lawyer to become chairman of the board of police commissioners.

"Simply then he has been about everywhere and seen about everything, and knows whereof he speaks. The greatest of the problems which the police have to solve is that of drunkenness. They will try to solve it, he says, for the greatest good of all concerned.

DRIVE TRAMPS OUT OF BOSTON

"Can I get a night's lodging at the lock up?" asks the dusty hobo who has shuffled into the country town a few hours' walk from the city.

"Where'd ye come from?"

"Boston."

"Well, you kin git right back. There ain't no room here. Too tired to hoof it? All right. I'll pay your fare back. That's cheaper for us than puttin' ye up here."

So speak the country constables, according to police statements. And toward night the gentlemen who usually walk from town to town come in on first-class trains. Frequently they go out on the following day, also on first-class trains, but in the charge of big policemen. The orders of Judge Emmons to clear the city of yeggmen and tramps is being obeyed. Caught here, they go down to Bridgewater as vagabonds.

CHINESE WON'T BE DEPORTED

Freedom and the right to continue to make money until the necessary "thousand dollar" has been saved with which to go home and become aristocrats, will probably be the fate of the 160 Chinamen held for trial after the Chinatown raid last fall. The decision of Justice Day of the United States Supreme Court regarding the deportation of Mongolians leads the authorities to expect nothing less than the failing through of all their cases.

The Brooklyn cases, on which the decision was rendered, are practically the same as those in Boston. In both cities failure to produce the necessary certificates is the basis for the proceedings. Many of the men arrested in this city secured bail. Others are now in Charles Street Jail awaiting trial.

Harrison street Celestials rejoiced when the news was spread there.

CUTTER SEMINOLE SAILS.

The revenue cutter Seminole, Captain Rogers, has left for the North Carolina station. She has been on a cruise to the eastward. The cutter Algonquin will take the place of the Seminole, and the cutter Gresham will go from New York to New London to take the Algonquin's place.

ASKED $750,000 FROM PAUL

Representative E. C. Paull of Taunton couldn't give Ernst B. Waldron of Dighton $50,000. Waldron asked for it most politely, making several trips to the State House to do so. Maybe Mr. Paull wouldn't have complained to the police if Waldron, who is twenty-two years old, hadn't raised the request within the past few days to the figure from $500,000.

The State police took Waldron to Taunton, where he was committed to the Insane Asylum.

The members of the Boston lodge of the International Association of Machinists are able to face the future with a guaranty that when old age comes they will be able to call upon the Association's superannuation fund for a substantial sum.

When members of ten years' continuous good standing reach the age of sixty-five they will receive $500. Those of twenty years' standing will be richer by $1000 when their years count sixty-eight. WOMEN WELCOME BOSTON AMERICAN

THEY EXPECT IT TO BE DEFENDER OF THE HOME AND THEIR RIGHTS.

Prominent women of Boston and vicinity heartily welcome the new BOSTON AMERICAN. They are unanimous in their appreciation of the work of the Hearst papers against whiskey and other enemies of the American home. Read what they say themselves.

MRS. MARY A. LIVERMORE, writer, lecturer and prominent temperance worker, says:

"Accept my greetings for the new paper and best wishes for its success if it lives up to its high promise."

LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON, poet and writer, says:

"I cordially welcome the BOSTON AMERICAN here, for it run on the same principles as Mr. Hearst's New York papers it will give news of the day promptly, accurately and concisely."

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL, editor of the Woman's Journal, says:

"I have not been in the habit of seeing the "NEW YORK JOURNAL," and do not know just what sort of paper it is. Some of my friends swear by it, and some of them swear at it. Some of the articles that I have seen copied from it I have disliked, and others I have liked very much—especially its vigorous utterances on the liquor question. My impression is that there is in Boston a large constituency which will be glad to have the opportunity of reading such a paper."

MRS. ELLA A. GLEASON, an officer of the W. C. T. U., says in her greeting:

"I can say that as county president of the W. C. T. U. we are glad to welcome to Boston an organ that aids us in our great cause—Temperance—all which helps to save numbers of young people from ruin."

KATE E. GRISWOLD, publisher and prominent business woman, writes:

"To the Management of Boston's Newest Newspaper: There is always room for 'one more' newspaper in any city if its methods, policy, contents and aims are of the right sort, and too the liking of the people. Undoubtedly, it will be the pleasure of the management of the new BOSTON AMERICAN to demonstrate its ability to meet all these requirements. May your success be according to your efforts, and your efforts successful."

MARTHA MOORE AVERY, lecturer and student of sociology, says:

"The coming of the AMERICAN has already stimulated the Boston newspapers along lines I am interested in,—the education of the work-a-day world. I know that the Boston papers which stand for trade unionism are giving more space than formerly to the labor question. I expect the interest in the labor world to be stimulated by the coming of this new paper."

THE REVEREND BERTHA A. BORTL E, assistant pastor of the Every Day Church on Shawmut avenue, says:

"My greetings to the new BOSTON AMERICAN. May it give to Boston the true American spirit, for with this spirit is fostered universal good."

Miss Bortle has the distinction of being the only woman in Boston who preaches from the pulpit.

AMY T. ACTON, one of Boston's most prominent women lawyers, says:

"I cordially welcome to Boston this new paper, called the BOSTON AMERICAN. I particularly indorse the standing which its management takes upon the trust question, its utter fearlessness in denouncing public frauds and its loyal championship of the country's laboring class."

TRADE UNIONISTS WILL APPRECIATE AMERICAN

CHARLES B. STIRLING, business agent, Boston Lodge 264, International Association of Machinists, says:

The advent of the BOSTON AMERICAN will be appreciated by all trade unionists. The New York American and Journal has done much for the advancement of organized labor and I trust that in the BOSTON AMERICAN we will have a paper equally devoted to the instruction of the working people of Massachusetts.

MILE STONE IN THE PROGRESS OF LABOR.

By JAMES R. CROZIER, President of the State Branch, A. F. of L.

On trade-union grounds, I am happy over the coming of the BOSTON AMERICAN to Boston. The event may well be considered a mile-stone which shows the progress of public opinion in Massachusetts with regard to the labor movement. The workers confidently hope that the AMERICAN will help them up any hills that may lie in the path ahead, and they will take hold now with renewed courage for a long pull, a strong pull and a pull altogether.

CARPENTERS DEPEND ON HEARST NEWSPAPERS

By CHAS. A. McDONALD, President of the Carpenters' District Council:

I thank Mr. Hearst for coming to Boston. Organized labor here will hold up the hands of the new AMERICAN in the fair-minded course that it means to take. You may know that I mean it when I tell you that of the one hundred and five delegates to the Carpenters' District Council probably not five are without a copy of the New York American and Journal.

BIG SHOOT PATRIOTS' DAY.

On Patriots' Day, April 19, there will be an all-day shoot at the grounds of the Boston Shooting Association, Wellington, Mass. O. R. Dickey will manage the affair and promises a good time to all who attend.

The BOSTON AMERICAN asks the workingmen of Boston to communicate with the Labor Editor of this newspaper at any time they may have suggestions to make that will help the cause of the workingmen,or at any time that errors creep into the paper. This department is printed TO HELP WORKINGMEN, and give a truthful view of THEIR affairs to the entire people of Boston. The AMERICAN is particularly desirous that the WORKINGMEN THEMSELVES should help to make this department what it ought to be. Secretaries or business agents of all unions in Boston and vicinity are requested to send details as to meeting-place and time of unions, with names and titles of officers.

HAS LONG ADMIRED THE HEARST PAPERS.

BY JOHN W. BARRY, Secretary and Business Agent Carriage and Cab Drivers' Union.

It is with great pleasure that I take this opportunity to express my appreciation of the great work Mr. Hearst has done in his valuable papers, throughout the county for the wage workers.

I have been a great admirer of the editorials in his papers for many years, and I feel sure that the BOSTON AMERICAN will be a grand success.

WILL BENEFIT WAGE WORKERS OF CITY

BY WILLIAM COHEN, President Lumber and Box Teamsters and Handlers' Union 112.

We are very much pleased that you have established a paper in Boston. We feel sure it will benefit the wage workers of this city.

We hope you will accomplish the good work here that you have in other cities, where your papers have become so valuable a factor.

HEARST PAPERS HAVE DONE MUCH FOR LABOR

R. H. BRADFORD, President Boston Structural and Building Alliance:

"Greetings to the BOSTON AMERICAN.

"It affords me great pleasure to speak in behalf of the wage earners of Boston. We are at last fortunate enough to have published in this city a paper that will be a benefit to organized labor.

"It is an undisputed fact that the Hearst papers throughout the United States have been the means of uplifting the poor, unfortunate wage earners, who are struggling for their rights.

"The editorials, I know, will be deeply appreciated by all who read them, because they are chapters of good common sense that will always remain in the minds of the readers.

"I sincerely hope that the BOSTON AMERICAN will have everlasting success."

MASS. LABOR LEADER WELCOMES AMERICAN.

BY JOSEPH G. JACKSON, First Vice-President Mass. State Branch A. F. of L. and Secretary Steam-tenders' Association, Fall River, Mass.

Welcome to the BOSTON AMERICAN. Its advent into the journalistic field of New England will be of incalculable benefit to the wage-earner and especially to organized labor. I wish it success and hope it will be received in the homes of all who toil for a living.

UNITED HATTERS GIVE WELCOME TO AMERICAN.

EDWARD J. PATTERSON, president of the local executive board of the United Hatters.

"I can say that the United Hatters will welcome the BOSTON AMERICAN for the stand that its sister papers have all taken for organized labor."

HIS PRIVATE PROPERTY.

Just Light-Hand Baggage, That's All!

"AMERICAN" GETS A WARM WELCOME

NEWSBOYS MAKE BIG SALES AND PUBLIC APPLAUDS FIRST NUMBER.

Never in the history of journalism, well posted and unbiased publishers declare, was the launching of a newspaper attended with such unqualified evidence of success as that of HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN, which made its maiden bow yesterday to the cultured, conservative citizens of the Athens of America, the residents of the New England States and provinces beyond the St. Lawrence.

Standing boldly out of the first day's story of the newspaper as an unprecedented compliment to its publisher was the interesting fact that John Lawrence Bates, the Republican Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, started the giant presses whizzing, upon which the initial edition was printed.

Turning to his friends, after the little ceremony of the starting of the press had been concluded, with a humorous winkle of his eye, the Chief Executive of the Bay State remarked:

"The people of Boston and New England generally were under the impression that this section of the country was visited by an earthquake early this morning. It was a mistake. The so-called seismic disturbance was but the bursting into life of another of Congressman Hearst's great newspapers."

HAD TO LEAVE OUT "ADS."

In spite of the 24 pages, it was impossible to print all the advertisements that were offered for insertion. In order that the readers of the others news columns—for advertising columns contained some of the most interesting and important news that was printed—might not be slighted, it became imperative to leave out some advertisements.

The circulating of the paper, carried out upon lines that had been carefully mapped out and prepared for the occasion, was accomplished without a hitch. Everywhere in the city of Boston and throughout the New England section the papers were snapped up with a celerity that amazed the news dealers. In Boston thousands of copies were sold by the delighted newsboys at 5 and 10 cents each. On the streets, in the hotel corridors, in the cars, everywhere BOSTON AMERICANS were to be seen in the hands of eager readers.

Messages of congratulation and good wishes for the success of the new newspaper poured in all day from various parts of the country and from every field of labor. State and city officials, the leading men of the labor world, ministers and prominent women sent their hearty felicitations.

The weather of the natal day of the AMERICAN could not have been better if the New England forecasters ordered it for the occasion. The sun rose in a blue sky that was not flecked by a single cloud. The air was clear and bracing and there was just that irresistible touch of spring in it that rouses the most lethargic citizen to action. Before the dawn had broken the army of employes of the AMERICAN had begun to swarm into the spacious quarters in which the new plant was installed at Nos. 80 and 82 Summer street.

Watched Giant Presses.

Oiled and polished, ready for action stood the Titani presses. Although they entered the plant in sections fresh from the shops, a few days' trial indicated that they were good for theier full capacity—forty-two eight-page papers, and a proportionate number of more pages up to 48.

These presses, the largest and fastest in the world, with the exception of two others of the same size and capacity owned by William Randolph Hearst, had been the object of great curiosity in Boston since they leaped into full-sized life from their foundations, were the cynosure of thousands of eager and intensely interested eyes as they whirled at incredible speed the completed papers from the folders.

In all of the departments of the paper there was the buzz of industry. In the editorial rooms on the third floor the editors, copy readers and reporters were engaged with pencil, typewriter or telephone. News stories were coming in from the city and the New England territory. Adjoining the editorial rooms could be heard the clickclick of telegraph instruments that tapped the first farthest corners of the globe. With some miles of leased wire in this country and ample facilities for gathering the happenings of every other land that the sun shines on, the editors were reasonably confident that they could not be scooped very badly on anything.

NEWSBOYS IN CROWDS.

Gathered in the street about the AMERICAN Building was a mass of struggling, pushing, yelling, but withal happy humanity. It was the advance guard of the army of newsboys. They had swept in excited bodies to the newspaper office long before the hour had arrived at which the first paper was printed. As fast as they came, they were registered, and sent out to await the first gift of the presses, happy in the possession of the official blue cap that stamped them as exclusive purveyors of the BOSTON AMERICAN.

Before 10 o'clock the street was seething with this blue-capped regiment of youthful. Thirty delivery wagons, red of wheel and top, harnessed to horses, yellow blanketed and restless, were backed to the curb, awaiting the first appearance of their strong-roped cargoes.

Bystanders, men, women and children, on hurried business, stayed their steps to marvel at these signs of impending "hustle."

Cheered the Start.

When the presses started the excitement of the horde of waiting newsboys reached the bursting point, and a great cheer, started by juvenile voices and taken up by hundreds of persons more mature, rang out through Boston's business section for the new Hearst newspaper.

In a minute after the presses started the first consignments of papers were in the delivery room. Here bare-armed athletes struggled with wrapping paper and rope, or shunted the fresh-made bundles to the broad counters.

Beyond, nimble-legged carriers shouldered their hundred-weight burdens and landed them nobly on the wagons.

"Canada points!" shouted a nervous, wiry little man from New York, as he battled, heavy laden, with the doorway.

"Canada points! Now, ain't dat de limit?" piped a slender specimen from Fleet street. "Say, wot's de guy mean?"

"Aw, git wise!" scoffed one of the "fly" hands, who had travelled some. "That's New York talk fer street corners!"

And little Bright Eyes had learned that "Canada" meant after all nothing more foreign than Roxbury Crossing or South Boston.

Loaded in trucks the first papers off the press were hurled into wagons and rattled off to the South Station, the largest railroad station in the country. These newspapers made a quick connection for Providence and other points the south of Boston. Other wagons piled high with bundles were whirled away to the North Station and sent labelled for Lynn, Salem, Haverhill, Lowell, Portsmouth, Lawrence and hundreds of other cities and towns to the north.

Tried to Double Orders.

Then followed the AMERICAN'S wagons drawn by fleet-footed horses to the thousands of newsdealers within Greater Boston. Many attempts were made by pedestrians to stop the flying vehicles of red, in order that they might buy one of the new papers, even going so far as to shout an offer of ten and twenty times the price of the paper—one cent.

So quickly did the customers snap up the papers that many dealers attempted to double the orders that they had previously given, but in order that all might have a fair show their wishes could not be complied with, and thousands of persons had to be satisfied with a glance at the paper owned by their more fortunate neighbor. The first issue of the paper was held tenaciously by the purchaser as a valued souvenir.

All through the day this same programme continued until the sporting edition had been delivered. Long before this telegrams and telephone messages from various points in which the Boston American circulates had been received at the AMERICAN office. They all told the same story—all papers sold and could have disposed of twice as many.

In front of the AMERICAN'S office on Summer street great crowds surged during the day to read the bulletins of the great news events of the day.

SPRINGFIELD GIRL LOST IN NEW YORK

MISS MYERS LEFT BROTHER'S HOME LAST AUGUST AND HASN'T RETURNED.

Special by Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, March 22.—The police of this city are asked to look for Miss Bertha Myers of Plattsburgh, N. Y., who left her brother's home in Springfield, Mass., August 25, to come to this city to become the wife of Spencer Duncan, who represented himself to Miss Myers's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bonaparte Myers, as a Kingston (N. Y.) commission merchant.

Relatives say she met Duncan, who is thirty-five years of age, in Plattsburgh, about seven years ago. Last Spring she was employed in Rochester, where she again met Duncan, and he asked her to marry him.

Miss Myers and Duncan came to Plattsburgh early in August, and after passing a week went to Springfield to visit Miss Myers's brother, Harry Myers. On leaving they were accompanied to the station by the brother, who saw them aboard a New York train.

No uneasiness was felt for several weeks afterward, though Miss Myers's failure to send an announcement of her marriage was considered strange.

A few days before Thanksgiving Mrs. Myers received a telephone message purporting to be from Kingston, saying that she would be home in a week or two. Mrs. Myers now has doubts that it was her daughter who was speaking to her.

Duncan said he was very well known in Niagara Falls and had relatives there. Photographs of Miss Myers and Duncan were sent to the police of Niagara Falls, as well as to the Kingston and Hudson police. Duncan having stated that he had two storehouses in Hudson, but in each instance the police were unable to furnish any information. Miss Myers's parents say that Duncan was of prepossessing appearance and apparently well supplied with money.

A STATEMENT
We're Proud to Make

1000 retail druggists who are the leaders of the drug trade of the United States, and that means the world, and who are rated by Bradstreet and Dun at $20,000,000 and whose retail business aggregates over $70,000,000 annual sales, have agreed to give their name, financial backing and endorsement to the guarantee that Rexall Mucu-Tone will cure any disease or trouble arising from Catarrh or they will refund the money.

We are proud of our connection with the Rexall Remedies, particularly so of Mucu-Tone.

Why? Because a remedy must be something out of the ordinary that will get our backing. It's not all profit that leads us and our 1,000 associates into endorsing this remedy. It is our years of experience with medicines and our knowledge of them that teaches us that is a bona-fide discovery for the cure of all ailments due to Catarrhal affections. We know that it is not a cure-all, but a remedy built on scientific lines—not a patent medicine—each one of the 1,000 druggists knows its formula and its value. It has one great additional value besides curing constitutional Catarrh—that is as a system builder. No such tonic was ever before designed for the curing of inflammation of the mucous membrane—nor can it be improved on in the present age.

Just stop and reason with yourself for one minute—we are doing business right here in your midst—could we afford to offer our name and endorsement to Mucu-Tone as we do if we did not know that it is an honest medicine? Can we afford to agree—as we hereby do—that we will refund you every penny you pay us for the medicine if it does not benefit you?

All we ask is your word and the empty bottle and we'll give your money back. No signed certificate. We believe the public, especially the sick, are honest—and we hope that they believe we are honest also. If they do, certainly every sick person who suffers from any of the following ailments should take advantage of our offer to-day.

SPORTING NEWS OF ALL THE WORLD IN THE BOSTON AMERICAN

"JOHN L." MAY LOSE HIS SIGHT

FORMER PRIZE RING CHAMPION, BROKEN IN HEALTH, GOING TO HOT SPRINGS.

There is still hope for John L. Sullivan, ex-champion heavyweight of the world, so is at the home of his sister, at No. 87 crook avenue, Roxbury, suffering from an affliction of the eyes. Dr. Whiting, of Bangor, Me., who is attending him, says John L. poisoned his eyes by using a towel in a hotel.

Sullivan is optimistic of the outcome, although his friends fear he may lose his sight. Rheumatism has also caused him considerable suffering of late.

Broken Down in Health.

When interviewed, the once mighty prize ring gladiator said:

"Broken down in health? Well, I should say 'nit.' My training days are over, I'll admit, but I have enough life and pluck left in this big frame of mine to whip a dozen of these late day so-called scientific pugs, and make good money easier than by appearing before the footlights, where some say I don't fit.

"The doctors say I will be able to take a trip to Hot Springs in about a month. I would be able to leave the Hub sooner but for this trouble with my eyes.

"I have suffered severely for a few weeks on account of using a bum towel in a New York hotel. The physicians say it contained germs that poisoned the optic nerves.

"As to the other trouble, it is with my stomach. I eat but little food sometimes.

"At present I take but little interest in the old game, for I know only too well that the pugs fighting nowadays are only bluffers. They do not dare to go the old game at which Paddy Ryan, Joe Goss, Peter Jackson, poor Jake Kilrain, George Dixon and John Flood, who died the other day, went a decade or two ago.

"I never was impressed with Corbett as a fighter, and in expressing an opinion of him I am not venting spleen on account of his wresting the championship from me some years ago.

"As a scientific boxer Corbett is without a parallel.

"But, all-round inclinations Fitzsimmons admires are his superiors.

Has Confidence in Fitz.

"Some say that Fitz is all in, but I would back him against Jeffries for any amount in getting the decision in a limited round contest, if a fight could be arranged.

"Jeffries, however, is to-day the world's champion. He is strong, husky and scientific.

"If he received proper encouragement, he might be able to prove to the lovers of the fistic art that he is the peer of them all.

"This big beefy Monroe should be setting up pins in a bowling alley instead of travelling about living on the reputation he acquired by gaining the decision over Al Limerick.

"The bale-pon days of fighting are over.

"Now contests are arranged for the purpose of money making. The crumbs of coke go to the bluffers themselves, the big 'uns, I mean the promoters, taking the long green from the suckers willing to pay any price and to gamble on a game which has been on the square for years."

COLLINS'S MEN AT PRACTICE

Special by Boston American Leased Wire.

MACON, Ga., March 22.—O'Neil, one of the utility men of the Boston Americans, was hit on the arm by a batted ball and had to quit work, but it is likely that he will be all right soon.

Another practice game was had with the Mercer University team, and the collegians held their own much better than heretofore, and created the impression upon the Bostons that there was some good baseball material in the South.

It now seems that all of the present team will stick with Manager Collins, except possibly one. Which one will be dropped remains to be seen, but the knowledge of the fact makes all who are on trial give the best in their shops. Manager Collins says his men are all about as fast as he hopes to get them, the warm sunshine and the balmy air having brought them out in a hurry.

The boys are now guessing and picking favorites for pennant winners. In their opinion their team, of course, comes first, and they count New York, Cleveland and Philadelphia next in order.

BOSTON BOAT OUT OF IT.

There seems to be little chance at present of a Boston boat competing in the great ocean race of schooners abroad this summer, still the event will prove of absorbing interest to all Hub yachtsmen.

BOBBY LOWE'S CHANCE.

Bobby Lowe, the old Boston second baseman, goes to Hot Springs with the Pirates to work out his leg. There is a chance of his being a utility man in place of Kruger, who has gone to Cincinnati.

PITCHER FROM MEXICO.

Mexican Rodriguez, a cracker-jack pitching freshman of Fordham, made his debut in the box against some Boston college club of his country up to predictions in Gotham. He is the first diamond wonder sent from the land of the Aztecs.

REFITTING THE CARMINA.

One of the big New York Yacht Club boats, Carmina, owned by Millionaire Charles Fletcher, is being overhauled at Lawley's yard, South Boston. In order to get her storage battery, a part of the bunker space had to be removed.

GARDNER VS. CHISHOLM.

Hoping, if he wins, to get matches with Jimmy Briggs, Martin Canole and Jig Stone, Billy Gardner, of Haverill, meets his old rival, Billy Chisholm, of the spindle city, in Dracut, Mass., tomorrow night. Three years ago Gardner fought Chisholm and was out after a lively battle of eleven rounds, twelve being the distance set.

CORBETT AND BRITT FIT FOR FRIDAY'S BATTLE.

Two little men of blood and iron will box for championship honors when Young Corbett and Jimmy Britt hook up in the ring at San Francisco Friday night. They have trained till their muscles are like cords of steel. Sport followers all over the country have big money on the result.

Though Young Corbett, whose mighty right has put Terrible Teddy, Young Hanlon, Dave Sullivan and a score of other Little Titans of the prize ring away, is picked to win, Britt has many who like him in a battle with the world's champion feather.

Corbett says: "There's nothing to it." Britt is confident his ability to block, which is akin to George McFadden's knack of saving the day, will prevent a sleep-producing Corbett wallop.

CORBETT OUTREACHES BRITT THREE INCHES

Special by Boston American Leased Wire.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 22.—Dr. Ben Apgele, physician for the Hags Valley Athletic Club, has examined both Britt and Corbett and pronounced them in the best of condition. The measurements of both were taken and a surprise comes in the matter of reach. It was thought all along that Britt had the advantage, but the official measurements show Corbett to have three inches the better of it. Following are the measurements:

BRITT.		CORBETT.
5 feet 6 inches	Height	5 feet 3 inches
66 inches	Reach	69 inches
34 inches	Chest (normal)	36½ inches
38½ inches	Chest (expanded)	38½ inches
36 inches	Chest (contracted)	34½ inches
13 inches	Neck	13½ inches
28½ inches	Waist	32 inches
12½ inches	Biceps	13½ inches
11 inches	Forearm	12 inches
7 inches	Wrist	7½ inches
22 inches	Calf	23½ inches
13½ inches	Calf	12 inches
8½ inches	Ankle	9 inches

Britt is sure that Corbett concluded to make the match with him after seeing the Canole bout at Colma.

"Because I made no use of my right arm, which was disabled," said Britt, "the little fellow from Denver made up his mind that the encounter was about as good as sawed off. He will learn that I am not going to try to bout him only with my left."

"I'LL WHIP JIMMY BRITT," SAYS YOUNG CORBETT.

BY YOUNG CORBETT.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., March 22.—I wish to inform my Boston friends I'll face Jimmy Britt in better shape next Friday night than I ever was before. This is to knock the stories that I haven't trained hard. As a matter of fact, I've done more work than usual, realizing Britt is a dangerous fellow. But I'll whip him sure. I know how good he is. He hasn't the wallop that can put me out, while I think my punch can rock him to sleep before the battle goes many hours.

NEW YORKERS EAGER TO COME.

Warm rivalry is manifested between the members of various New York athletic clubs, as to which boxers shall represent them, in the coming meet March 28, at Mechanics Building. Chairman James E. Sullivan, of the A. A. U., is quoted as saying that he is worked to death by numerous applicants.

NATIONALS DO GOOD PRACTICE

TIM MARVILLE, Ga., March 22.—The weather race seem alone a temperature of 80 degrees in the shade for the Boston Nationals first day's work. Manager Selee, Buckenberger and the boys to the ball grounds.

Flaherty, Stewart, Wilke, Pittinger and Wilhelm all took turns in going. No one let out a hit, but the action of the new men, particularly Pitcher, was fine. Dick Cooley hit in great form, but he almost broke his back going after a slow one Pitt threw up for him. Delahanty hits at a ball exactly the same way that made his big brother famous, and this boy can hit a bit, too. Joe Dean failed to show up, so Aubrey was played at short during the fielding practice. Palmer plays a ground ball in the most approved fashion, and if he can make good with the stick should be of great help to the club.

PICKPOCKETS HAVE AGAIN INVADED CITY

Dudley Street Elevated Terminal Their Favorite Working Place.

After leaving Boston severely alone for two or three months, out-of-town pickpockets have again invaded the city. Several complaints have been made to the police within the last few days of losses incurred through the deftness of the light-fingered gentry, most of them having been reported from the Dudley street elevated terminal. There have been several arrests on suspicion, and the police hope to put a stop to the petty pilfering by unusual vigilance. The Dudley street terminal is under close surveillance.

YOUNG SIDNEY BEATS HESSELL

Special to the Boston American.

BELLOWS FALLS, Vt., March 22.—Before a big crowd of sports Young Sidney, of Derby, won a decision over Kid Hessell, in a 15-round bout at the Fal Mountain A. C., at North Walpole, N. H.

Lively work was done in each of the rounds, both lads being strong at the finish. For four rounds the boys were even. The Boston boy forged to the front, except in the sixth, seventh and eighth, when Hessell slugged hard.

In the last two there was some hard milling, both vainly trying for a knockout.

Johnny Daly won a sharp curtain-raiser of eight rounds from Kid Freeman, his Boston rival.

PAY MAY BE RAISED IN SPITE OF THE PRESIDENT

Effort to Be Made to Have Congress Increase Wages of Letter Carriers.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—Boston ought to be made during the consideration of the post office appropriation bill now pending in the House to obtain an increase of salary for letter carriers of the country. The carriers have appealed to Congress for years for better wages, but they have never been given ever fair consideration. And since the last campaign they have been denied the right to petition Congress for better conditions. President Roosevelt issued an executive order forbidding letter carriers to petition Congress, and attention will be called by friends of the postal employes to this arbitrary use of authority.

HART COULDN'T BOX RUHLIN

Special by Boston American Leased Wire.

PHILADELPHIA, March 22.—To several hundred spectators who had gathered in the Lenox A. C. to see the battle it was explained that Marvin Hart was so badly punished by Sandy Ferguson, of Boston, in their recent Hot Springs bout that the Louisville man could not box Gus Ruhlin six rounds last night.

In Hart's substitute was in the clubhouse Referee Rouge declared all bets off and turned the gate money to the disappointed enthusiasts.

CALLS A BULLET IN HIP A LITTLE JOKE

Negro Refuses to Tell Who Shot Him While Visiting in the South End.

Harry Brown, a negro, living at the Falmouth House, evidently considers a bullet in his hip a pleasant greeting from a friend, according to the story he told the police. While Brown was visiting at 1 Burbank street, South End, he received this testimonial of regard, but when the patrolman on the beat started an investigation, Brown said it was all a joke, and would not tell by whom he was wounded. The injury was slight.

POPE ON ST. GREGORY.

ROME, March 22.—The Pope has issued an encyclical on the thirteenth centenary of St. Gregory. It asks that the pictures, sculpture and architectural features of the Church of St. Gregory be reestablished.

OLD DUKE LAID TO LAST REST

LONDON, March 22.—The funeral of the Duke of Cambridge, cousin of the late Queen Victoria, who died on Thursday last, after a lingering illness, was held at Westminister Abbey this morning with great ceremony. The burial was at Kensal Green Cemetery. The body rested over night at the Abbey. Early this morning a great crowd began to gather all along the way from Buckingham Palace to the Abbey to greet the King and Queen as they passed.

King Edward, Queen Alexandra, the Princess Victoria and Prince and Princess Charles of Denmark left Buckingham at 10:30, the Prince and Princess of Wales leaving Marlborough House at the same time.

At the Abbey there was a great concourse of notables, including the Duke of Connaught, the Prince and Princess Christian, Prince Albert of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duke and Duchess of Fife, the Duchess of Albany, Prince and Princess Louis of Battenburg, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar, a number of military officials and representatives of various bodies.

The service at the Abbey was beautiful and impressive. Following this the procession to the cemetery formed, and the last rites were completed. The route from the Abbey to the cemetery was thronged. The police kept good order.

HAWAIIAN ROYAL HEIR.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 22.—Honolulu reports a son was born on March 10 to the Prince and Princess David Kawanankoa. The boy is the first male heir of the Kalakaua line to be born for many years.

LITTLEFIELD IN SOUTH.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—Representative Littlefield of Maine is one of the delegates of the House that will accompany the remains of Representative Thompson of Alabama to their final resting place.

OLD FASHIONED WHIPPING POST MAY BE BUILT

A whipping post may shortly be placed in picturesque Central square at Waltham, if Rep. L. N. Staples, pastor of Asbury Temple in Waltham, has his way. He strongly advocates the establishment of a public whipping post for wife beaters and wife deserters. He would have such characters lashed publicly in the square of each city.

To a reporter for the AMERICAN he said: "The crimes of wife desertion and wife beating are so reprehensible that they demand punishment beyond, or at least different from, that which is now in common use.

"I can think of nothing that would act as a greater deterrent to such practices than a public whipping in the public square of each city for all such offenders. If it should be said in opposition to this plan that such punishment is degrading to an American citizen, I would say that any man who indulges in such acts of cruelty as I have named is already too base to be classed as an American citizen. Some mode of corporal punishment is absolutely necessary, and I think the whipping post will solve the question effectually."

MHAARG AND LENNY DRAW.

CHESTER, Pa., March 22.—Billy Mahara of Philadelphia and Eddie Lenny of this city fought a six-round battle with honors even last night before the Chester Broadway A. C.

LOWERY IS AFTER SULLIVAN.

NEW YORK, March 22.—Jack Lowery, the featherweight, of this city, is after a fight with Kid Sullivan, the Washington featherweight, who won a decision over Tommy Daly, of this city, in Baltimore on Friday last. Lowery will take the Capital City boxer on for any number of rounds, at any weight, and cut the money any way he likes.

MYSTIC VALLEY BOWLING.

Calumet lost its one-game lead by a three-straight win of Tewanda over Melrose Highlands, giving the latter team a tieing position for first place. This was effected by strong team work, though the Melrose team put up a great struggle.

GARRETT P. SERVISS EXPLAINS CAUSE OF THE EARTHQUAKE

Under Ocean Some-thing New England Coast Brought Shock.

Boston American Leased Wire.

Garrett P. Serviss.

NEW YORK, March 22.—The harp and unexpected earthquake that New England yesterday morning

Brunswick to Connecticut has ints of special scientific interest. thquake cycle, if there really is ng, appears to endure for a series ve years.

ical point of special interest is Eng and is one of the region of eden which, both upon historic and chemical evidence, have been s eminently free and safe from s. New England is not quite e. In this respect it and the Middle and those north of the Ohio valley, in immediate neighbor on the north, e.

the present occasion the earth- are described as having passed from north to south. This would indicate that the focus of the shock was situated in the direction of the Canadian frontier and not under the ocean bed, as seems to have been the case with the shock of 1884. If the centre of disturbance really was located between the New England coast and the St. Lawrence river the fact would be a very singular one because of the immunity of that part of the earth's crust from seismic disturbance.

"It is much more likely that the focus will turn out to have been situated near or off the coast. A little slip of the underlying rocks near the shore line, due to the strain of internal forces, could have suffered, as it did in the case of Charleston, to set the land to a tremor over hundreds of square miles.

"The question is sure to be raised in many minds by this earthquake affecting so many cities where towering buildings have sprung up since 1884 whether such buildings would be in any special peril from a great shock settling the ground and rocks beneath by violent undulation. It may be said at once that it is probable that great steel structures of many stories would be in no more danger and perhaps in less danger of falling during an earthquake than are buildings of the older style of architecture."

Theory of New England's Immunity from Seismic Disturbances Is Now Shattered.

QUAKE SHATTERS POOL TABLES IN MANCHESTER

Reports from New England points tell of all sorts of queer freaks resulting from the earthquake. The pool parlors of the Hibbard Club, Manchester, N. H., was shaken out of all semblance to order. On Union street 27 beams were split in two and cracks of from one-half inch to a foot entirely about every rat in town was driven to the open, and the rats have been on the spot since.

In the home of Mrs. Alden Richardson, Bath, Me., a lamp was tipped off a table. A vase beside it was not disturbed.

The humorous side was shown in Springfield, although Patrolman M. F. Costello did not think it very funny. He was standing in a doorway on Chestnut street when he heard a piercing screech, and felt the building quiver on his head. He grabbed up the hands sank in the fur of a rat which had fallen from the beam on the roof's edge when the quake came. Costello was scratched about the face.

DR. LOUGEST

Cures Varicocele, Hydrocele and Stricture without an operation, and stops unnatural discharges within (3) three days.

Men "I have practiced my specialty for 30 years in Boston, with branches or offices in other cities. I give my whole attention to my Boston practice, and can refer to my work among a number of establishments."—Dr. LOUGEST.

I GUARANTEE to cure all curable, week, diseased and despondent men in less time and at less cost than any other living specialist.

I use stricture by means of the "Electron Method. This new term actually describes the painless, soothing manner in which the disorganized glandules are "dispersed" and discharged, and the germs that are imbedded in the deep mucous membranes are destroyed. This method penetrates the entire original and enclosing sac, which has become affected by the disease, and by this new method, when a positive cure can be had which is both painless and bloodless. I can cure your Varicocele without causing the slightest pain or discomfort. Varicocele not only causes tenderness and weakness, but it paralyzes and disables the intricate and delicate nerves and arteries that control the action of the vital essences, totally destroying the manly vigor and power of procreation. The symptoms of nervous and sexual debility in the parts diseased are as follows: Dragging sensation, disharge and loss are soon followed by impotency.

Blood Poison is the factor of foul diseases, and is the most dreaded of all diseases. Its symptoms are well known, and I do not allow your self to be experimented upon, but if you have this loathsome disease, put your case in my hands, my money on patent medicines and such like, and I guarantee to get immediate relief and a perfect cure in a short time. My treatment has stood the test of years—no mercury—no metals. I can make you strong, vigorous and manly, fully prepared for happy marriage.

I will cure you as sure as you come to me for treatment, or I will pay you $1,000 in gold for your trouble and compensation, or if you are afflicted with manhood, night losses, impure dreams, pains in the back, blue rings under the eyes, bad memory, dizziness and specks before the eyes.

BOXING

LOU CRIGER THE WORLD'S CHAMPION BEHIND THE BAT.

Willing Lou Criger of the Boston Americans, who bids fair to win new laurels this campaign, receiving such speedy hurlers as Dineen, big Cy Young and Lefty Tannehill, is beyond peradventure, "the world's champion baseball catcher."

For finish, send and inside knowledge of how to help a balky box artist put them over, Criger stands alone at present in a premier class.

This will be his fourth season with the Boston Americans, and on him will fall the bulk of the catching.

Revels in a Tough Job.

In some ways Lou's last labors were never equalled. His nerve in going in all the diamond battles between the Hub and Pittsburg, after backstopping in 95 of 140 regular championship games, showed his backbone.

This, too, in the face of a bunch of hostile criticism, of those who weakened on the Beantown wonders, when Fred Clarke's club won. Lou had a funny day that opener. To this moment he cannot account for some of his measly tosses to second. Everything seemed to go awry. No matter how hard he tried to grasp the ball in his big basket, it persisted in juggling out.

Dreaded partisans of the Smoky City troupe howled at big Lou in sardonic glee. He wanted to beat the enemy, but the more he tried, the worse matters got. Poor Criger was all at sea. With a mob of 25,000 rooting he never quit.

Delivered the Goods Next Day.

Well, Boston lost the first heat, and there was chagrin in the sun bleachers. Despite noisy knocks Lou was there with the goods next day, and the weakness wilted. After that it was easy sailing, and maybe the Dutch boy didn't stall Leach, Clarke, Wagner and other western flyers at every base.

He jumped in for dear life and caught Big Cy, Lightning Bill Dineen, and Hefty Jerky Hughes for all there was in it every season after that.

But to get back where Lou started. He was born in Elkhart, Ind., in 1872. In 1895 he joined Kalamazoo.

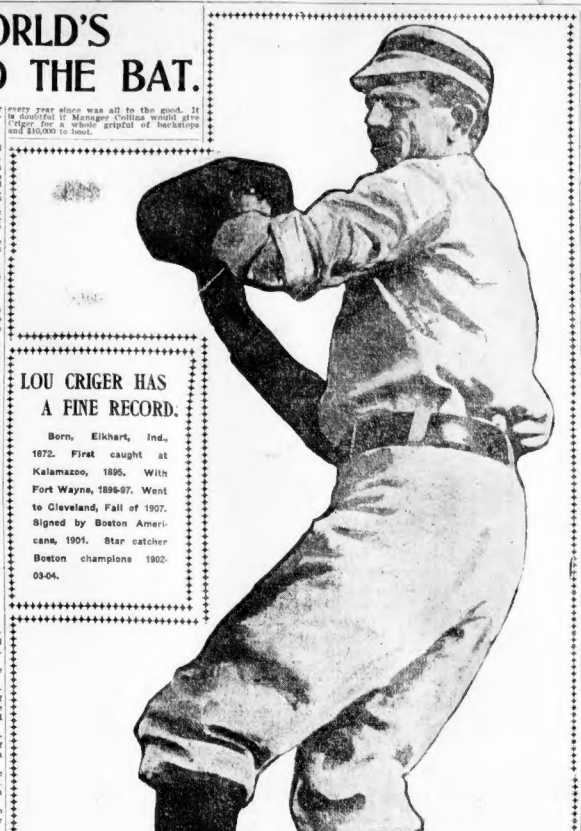
King Kelly once played there, and reminiscences of the great ever encouraged Criger to learn all of the $10,000 art behind the bat.

Won Favor at the Start.

Fort Wayne, a Cleveland farm, sent him a contract in 1896-97. Criger's crack whip attracted the attention of Buck Freeman, who was running the Forest City bunch.

This was in the harvest days of W, and tall, blonde Lou was the hit of the camp. When the Indians were transferred to St Louis, Criger was in the swap, and he caught the best ball ever seen in Moundsville.

He was here at the go-off in 1901, and every year since was all to the good. It is doubtful if Manager Collins would give Criger for a whole grip full of backstops and $10,000 to boot.



LOU CRIGER READY TO LINE A THROW TO SECOND BASE.

LOU CRIGER HAS A FINE RECORD.

Born, Elkhart, Ind., 1872. First caught at Kalamazoo, 1895. With Fort Wayne, 1896-97. Went to Cleveland, Fall of 1907. Signed by Boston Americans, 1901. Star catcher Boston champions 1902-03-04.

NEW HARVARD STROKE TRIED WITH SUCCESS

First Spin of the Crews Shows Good Results of Colson's Work.

Harvard's first spin of the season on the Charles River gives evidence of the improvement which has marked Coach Colson's efforts.

Watched by the graduate committee of rowing, including J. Storrow, E. J. Storrow, G. S. Mumford and "Pete" Higginson, the two boats made short spirited sprints before the boat house.

With a final admonition to "hold the slides," Colson placed his men in working boats in row and paddle.

They then turned and ran down to the Boylston street bridge.

Slow and Rythmical Beat.

Instead of a quick, sharp stroke, as last year the "beat" was slow and rythmical. At no time did it pass more than twenty-two strokes to the minute. This big change was immediately evident, and hundreds who watched were greatly pleased.

In the bushes the neat crew showed clearly superior.

Both Smith, '05, and Smith, 21., were tried at stroke in the first boat. Smith has had much experience in this position, and this fact pinced him in a favorable light.

Not Sure About Swain.

Some doubt is entertained as to whether Swain, '08, will be able to make his best showing, owing to the fact that it is less than a year since he was operated upon for appendicitis.

The order of the first crew was: Stroke, Smith, Swain; 7, Puffy; 6, Filley, 5, Lewen; 4, Shurtleff; 3, Gill; 2, Pleasanton; bow, Captain Billingham.

Colson spent much of his time in explaining his work to the rowing committee. Hugh Hanerty, who is now coaching the junior crew, joined the party and expressed himself as confident of good results from Colson's work.

He said: "Harvard has suffered for many years by not being sufficiently trained in controlling the slide. The fact has tended to cause the crew to rush and a consequent 'settling' between strokes has resulted. It is evident from this afternoon's row that Colson has done much to remedy this grave fault, chasing is Daily rows will be taken and training will begin in about a week.

TWO NIGHTS OF BOXING PLANNED

Boston and New York Amateur Bouts Next Saturday and Monday.

Big interest was evinced by Boston boxing devotees when the promoters of the national amateur championships announced that preliminaries will probably be held Saturday night next, to weed out an aspiring crop of boxers, so many want to compete in the stellar events Monday, March 23, in Mechanics Hall.

Club men, who are ardent followers of the art of hit and side step, would appreciate two nights of sport, it is thought, instead of the lengthy programme of bouts in charge is contemplated.

Star New Yorkers Expected.

This plan would bring over the star New York men, including Epicry Payne, heavyweight amateur champion, and W. J. Rodenbach, 158-pound premier of the national amateur game, a right sooner.

If enough favorable replies are received from members of the B. A. A. and other leading athletic clubs, the two-night plan probably will be put into effect.

There will be several bouts of more than local interest, in which the best amateur boxers of Gotham will clash with Boston boys.

Payne, one of Chief Croker's fearless fire fighters, and Rodenbach, of the New West Side A. C., who will box for all there is in it, will put up perhaps the feature bout of the whole show. With each will be a delegation of rooters from little old Manhattan, in close fraternal company, and a battle of the first water is expected.

Rodenbach and Payne.

Rodenbach says he is perfectly happy to meet Payne on Saturday night, as he thinks he would be fresher. If this idea is adopted he would be prepared to defend his title better on Monday evening, he figures, against Hubtown cracks, two of whom have challenged.

All of last year's A. A. U. champions, in the 105, 115, 125, 135, 145 and heavy classes, have entered in the coming contests. R. Metzler, of the Riverside Boat Club, of Cambridge; Thomas Stone, of the New York A. C.; Amoreaux J. McGarry, Mott Haven A. C.; John Leavey, Pastime A. A.; W. H. Rodenbach, New West Side A. C., and Emory Payne, Mott Haven A. C., are all of new York, chasing in weight order from bantam to giant Jeffries class, will be on to compete.

HORSEMEN'S EYES TURN TO BENNINGS

Successful Opening of the Racing Season Predicted for Thursday.

Lovers of the thoroughbred eagerly await the opening of the Eastern racing season at Bennings on Thursday. Most of the stables that will compete there during the next few weeks are already on the ground.

All indications point to the Bennings meeting proving a very successful curtain raiser to the better things to come, when the racing scene shifts to the big Metropolitan tracks around New York.

Owing to the very severe Winter and poor track conditions most of the Eastern horses at Bennings are not as forward in their training as their owners could wish, and they will be at a disadvantage, for a short time at least, with the horses that have been campaigning on the Winter tracks and have raced themselves into condition.

For this reason, the chances of Tribes Hill and Honolulu to win the Bennings handicaps are seriously discussed among horsemen. Many of them consider Tribes Hill to have been the most consistent handicap horse of the meeting at New Orleans, while Honolulu has won several good races at Hot Springs.

It is expected that at least sixty books will begin operations the first day of the meeting, and that all of the prominent members of the Metropolitan Turf Association will be on hand ready for business.

FINE GAMES IN ST. ALPHONSUS GYM TO-NIGHT

Well-Known Amateur Athletes to Compete in Variety of Sports.

There will be sports in great variety, including fencing, wrestling and all-round gymnastics, in the St. Alphonsus A. A. gym to-night.

Many well-known amateurs will compete and a big house is assured.

Physical Director De Cost of the association and Elmer F. Seaholme, captain of the St. James fencing team, will give the grand salute and a bout of parry and thrust.

From start to finish the wrestling between E. O. Parker and H. V. Rollins of the Young Men's Christian Association should prove good.

In the second fencing event Mr. Duke Seaholme of the Y. M. C. U., with Mr. C. E. Bridges, will give an exhibition with broadswords.

John Vignaux of Lowell will attempt to throw H. H. Snow, a local aspirant for wrestling honors.

After these numbers are concluded there will be a battlopin exercise between two of the house teams. This will be followed by several vaudeville numbers to close the evening's entertainment.

Hughey Duffy, who is coaching the baseball team, announces that he will have a strong one this year.

BASEBALL AT HARVARD

This will probably be the last week of indoor baseball practice at Harvard. Captain Clarkson hopes to get his men out on the field early next week, and is hoping that the weather of the early Varsity will be practically decided before the men begin outdoor work.

The old 'Varsity players are showing up well in the practice. It looks as if Randall, first base, and Matthews, the negro shortstop, will continue to hold down the third leg, as in the past two seasons.

H. B. Reeves, Jr., and H. K. Stephenson, left and right field respectively, are playing in their old form.

For catcher, in the place of H. P. Kernan, of last year's nine, the most likely candidate is W. A. Quigley, a sophomore.

For the second base, Coolidge, old position, E. L. Grant and J. D. Nichols, left half back, of last year's team, are candidates, as is also Carl Marshall, captain of the same team. Grant seems to be the quickest as well as the hardest hitter of the three.

For center field, Gardner, a second year man, from the preparatory ranks of Cushing, has gone a-gunning.

Captain Clarkson and Coburn will again do the pitching. The only new man who has shown up well so far is H. L. Cassels, who pitched on the Freshman team last year.

FERGUSON IS AFTER HART

Sandy Ferguson, who has arrived in town from Spokane with his manager, Alec McLean, says he is ready for another go with Marvin Hart of Louisville.

"I guess Hart is through with me for good to the hospital for repairs," said Sandy. He is sure he will not only get a decision, but knock the Louisville lifter out before the end of ten rounds next time they meet.

Four times he said he had Hart down and almost out, and the bell saved him.

The backers of the Louisville man will put up a side bet Manager McLean said he would cover. Ferguson leaves Gus Ruhlin in Chicago on April 1, and expects to win before the end of six rounds decided.

COLLEGE TENNIS MATCH.

Princeton tennis players, despite the fact they have lost some of their best players, hope to win the dual match with Harvard at Cambridge June 1.

SCHOOL CLUB SECOND TEAMS

Baseball has grown so among the Boston schools second teams to work out with the big interscholastic clubs, are talked of this spring.

Local high school nines might achieve much better results on the diamond if the idea is adopted.

In cases where the plan has been tried marked success has resulted. Coaches and managers figure if second football teams are a go there is no reason why the same should not be true of baseball.

It is generally believed a second team would be pretty near as fast as their older comrades, because diamond skill in schools is about on a par.

Dorchester High, thanks to Coach Sherlock's foresight, intends to have a big league winner if a second nine will do it.

Just as soon this week as the weather allows he will have his youthful proteges out on the turf lined up in two teams.

Boston Latin, English High, Newton High, Brookline High and three of the others will probably be in line.

Perhaps a league of second teams may be started to give the national sport an impetus.

YACHTS FOR OCEAN RACES

Ocean races are being widely discussed by members of the Boston Yacht Tribunal. A sweepstake race of $5,000 a corner is proposed by several members of the New York and Larchmont clubs, who own these larger schooners that already raced across the water.

There are a few boats in Boston and vicinity that might have a chance in this 3,000-mile event. Some of the yachtsmen of the Hub confine themselves to racing mostly on a smaller scale.

As the yachting season is about to open, any event that is connected with this sport is of much importance to the local navigators. Some well-known yachtsmen are booked to ship aboard these prospective racers. Captain Charr, the former, and Captain Brewster, the [illegible]

Another boat, the Endymion, owned by George Lauder, Jr., holder of the cross Atlantic record of 13 days 20 hours, from Sandy Hook to Southampton, will possibly compete. This boat holds the along the coast record of 627 miles in 61 hours 5 minutes.

The Fleur de Lys, owned by Dr. George A. Stimson, is considered the best boat in heavy weather on the lakes. She has demonstrated her ability to withstand these terrors of the ocean more than once. When these boats arrive on the other side they will make a strenuous effort to bring back the Cape May Cup, which was taken by the Genesta in 1885 and has been held by English yachtsmen ever since.

AUSTRALIAN FIGHTER HERE.

Special by Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, March 21.—Another foreign pugilistic champion has reached these shores, ready to tackle his Yankee rivals. He is Arthur Cripps, a native of Dublin. He holds the middleweight championship of Australia, where he has lived from childhood.

He arrived here on the Cedric and immediately called on Sam Fitzpatrick, the erstwhile manager of famous pugilists and well known all over the world, who will look after his interests here.

Cripps is a likely looking chap only twenty-four years old and well developed. With Manager Fitzpatrick he paid a visit to the New York American to-day and displayed a record of his battles throughout Australia and South Africa.

TRACK EVENTS AT DETROIT.

Besides the historic $10,000 race for 2:24 trotters, some great track events are carded for the 26th annual blue ribbon circuit meeting, which is to be held at Grosse Pointe track, Detroit, Mich., July 18. There will also be the rich $2000 Chamber of Commerce stake for 2:24 class pacers.

BASKETBALL IN SOUTH BOSTON.

Because of the large following of St. Augustine and the South Boston Gym basketball teams, there should be a big crowd of rooting spectators at Clan-na-Gael Hall, South Boston, when the teams struggle for the supremacy of the district tomorrow night.

NAVAL CADETS IN ROWING.

Richard Glendon, former rowing coach of the B. A. A., hopes to turn out a winning crew at Annapolis. Races are arranged with University of Pennsylvania, April 20; Yale Varsity, May 11; Georgetown Varsity and Freshmen, May 21.

TWO NEW SCHOOLS ADMITTED

St. Mark's School, of Southboro, and Waterbook Seminary have been admitted to membership in the New England Interscholastic Athletic Association. Carl Linnell, of Brookline High, has been chosen [illegible]

WILL LYNN BE IN N. E. LEAGUE?

In a few days it will be settled whether or not Lynn will be given a New England League base ball franchise.

To the president has come a wire from Secretary J. E. Farrell, of the minor associations, asking if he intended to enter the Shoe City in the diamond stakes with Worcester.

At present those two cities are anxious to come in for some of the good sport assured in this section, but President Murphy, of the board of control, has not yet made up his mind which is the best circuit.

Nashua, Manchester, Lowell, Lawrence, Haverhill, New Bedford and Fall River would make a compact, lively fight as planned now.

Owing to the scrappy claim of the little association promoters, there should be a chance of Lynn figuring in league baseball, but hardly in Class B, which requires 400,000 population, and a big bonus.

GOLF WEEK AT ST. AUGUSTINE

Special by Boston American Leased Wire.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., March 22.—This is golf week in St. Augustine and many crack players, who have been contesting for honors in the tournaments at the lower east coast resorts, have arrived.

Entries for events here are large. Play began to-day with preliminary rounds, to be followed during the next two days with play for prizes offered for the annual tournament of the Florida East Coast Golf Club.

On Thursday medal play will begin in preliminary for the Winter championship games, to be followed on Friday and Saturday with match play to the finals.

NEW CHICAGO PITCHERS.

Three new box men, who may prove live ones, will be used by the Chicago American baseball team. Walsh of Newark, Dougherty of Chicago, who pitched for Atlanta last year, and Strickfaet, who has recently arrived from the Northwest, are the trio. These, with Patterson, Flaherty and Doc White, will give Comiskey a complete pitching outfit.

BARR TO SAIL THE INGOMAR

Special by Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW LONDON, March 22.—Morton F. Plant, owner of the steam yacht Ingomar, who has been here inspecting the work on his new estate at Eastern Point, announced to-day that the date of the sailing of the Ingomar for Europe to contest in ocean races has been fixed for April 15.

Mr. Plant will leave for Europe with a party on April 2. Captain Charles Barr, of this city, sailing master of the victorious cup yachts Columbia and Reliance, will command the Ingomar. The yacht is being refitted and repainted at Bristol, R. I.

MELLODY-SWEENEY BOUT.

Boxer Billy Mellody of Boston, who won from Eddy Connolly, Matty Mathews and Otto Siegel, meets Patsy Sweeney of Manchester, N. H., in the Auditorium, Portland, Me., next Thursday night. It will make the second time these two have hooked up, the Bunker Hill lightweight scoring a win. Jig Stone, who claims he is Mellody's equal, thought of following Mellody to Portland, but will remain here to challenge him or Joe Sweeney.

A SPRING FROCK FROM PARIS.

FROCK OF RESEDA GREEN DAMASK CLOTH

PARIS, MARCH 7TH.

One of the daintiest frocks I have seen is of reseda green damask cloth. The skirt is trimmed with three rows of knife pleating, one half way down the skirt, the other round the hem. This knife pleating, by the way, is seen on more than half the Spring gowns. The waist has a full vest of cream-colored accordion pleated chiffon and a deep cape collar of Venetian lace. The full elbow sleeves are finished by double ruffles of the lace. The deep-pointed girdle is of green panne velvet. The hat worn with this Spring-like creation is of yellow straw trimmed with shaded yellow roses and draped with Venetian lace. A most desirable feature of the smartest gowns is that there is absolutely no rustle to their linings. That sweetest music to a woman's ears, the frou-frou of her silken underskirts, is no longer to be heard. All the lining silks are soft and noiseless. It seems quite proper that it should be so, for some way or other stiff rustling linings would not seem appropriate with the long clinging draperies affected by the women of fashion this year.

DRIVEN FROM HOME.

A THRILLING LOVE STORY BY HAL REID.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

At the Maynard farm the father and mother sit quietly talking about their children, Dave and Margie. Dave is an artist. Margie is engaged to Tom Anderson, a young farmer, who overhears her say she is not sure whether she loves him or not.

CHAPTER III.

"I Was Sure I Loved You Until——"

MARGIE ceased twirling her broad Leghorn hat by its rose-colored ribbons, and lifted her eyes to his.

"I don't see what all this is about Tom. I have promised to be your wife. Father has promised it, too, so what more do you want?"

Tom's face was pale with the stress of his emotions, but his voice was gentle as he replied: "No, that isn't all, darling. You don't imagine that I would ask you to keep your promise just because you made it, do you? I have told you that I love you. That means a great deal to me. The right kind of love never allows its object to sacrifice itself. I must know that you love me before we become man and wife."

The brown eyes met his gray ones pleadingly, and a sweet, uncertain voice answered: "I don't know, Tom. Indeed, I don't know. A woman's heart is not an inanimate thing which she may place here or there at will. I ought to love you, Tom."

She paused, then went on with a little catch in her voice: "You have always been so gentle and loving and good to me. You would not have me tell you that I love unless I knew, would you, Tom?"

Instinctively the small, gloved hand met the big, bronzed one, Tom gave it a gentle brotherly pressure, as Dave would have done.

"No, Margie! I would rather die than that it should happen that after we were married you should find that our marriage had been a mistake."

"That's it, Tom!" The man's face grew whiter as he heard the eager note in her voice. "That is what makes me afraid. I was sure I loved you until——until——"

Tom beat his curly head to peer into the averted face, but the gathering twilight foiled him.

"Until—until what, Margie?"

"Until lately." Margie faltered. "Until——"

Tom's features took on some of the calmness she so dreaded in her father's face. He pointed to the end of the strip of woodland, and finished her sentence:

"Until that city chap came to his hunting lodge out yonder, Margie."

Margie's cheek flushed, and into her eyes stole the slow light of growing anger.

"How dare you say that, Tom Anderson? How dare you?"

"Where were you when I passed you on the way to the post office? And what were you doing?"

Margie lifted her head proudly, and her eyes flashed.

"Am I your slave before marriage that I must answer such a question?"

There was silence between them for a moment, then Tom answered with some of his old gentleness.

"No, Margie, you need not answer. I saw you step on the roadside to talk with Hamilton Van Cruger, and I rather see you talking with the devil himself. It would be safer. I know him, dear. Take my word for it, he has blown men. You are a country girl, dazzled by a hunting suit with an imitation man in it. You are a poor little fly starting into the fatal spider's web."

In spite of his resolve to be fair, a deep bitterness crept into his voice.

"You loved me until he came? Now, you don't know."

Margie flashed out her answer with a suddenness that made him gasp.

"Oh, yes, I do. I know now, Tom Anderson! You have shown me plainly that I despise you."

"Margie!" Her name spoken there in the dusk sounded like the cry of a broken heart. The man reeled and put his arms to the girl, but she sprang away from him.

"Yes. And you have shown me how foolish I would have been to marry you. My life would have been made a living hell by a jealous country lout. Go! I defy you to make me keep my promise to marry you. I will defy the devil himself rather than marry you. I will even defy my father."

"Margie!" Tom's voice was humble, contrite, appealing. "I'm sorry, little girl! Forgive me."

"I will hear nothing. Go!"

Tom, with the face of one death-stricken, gave her one last entreating look. The proud eyes refused to meet his. Slowly he went down the walk. She heard the gate close.

Margie, darling, what have you done?"

Margie flung her arms about David's neck and burst into violent weeping.

CHAPTER IV.

I Love You Better Than My Life.

"OH, dear! Dave! My heart is broken, for I know now that I love Tom better than my own life."

"But you said a moment ago, Margie——"

"Never mind what I said, Dave. I am a woman. Another would understand, but the wisest man in the world wouldn't know. If I talked to him all day. I didn't know I loved Tom when I had him, but now that I've lost him I know. I do love him, Dave! I do!"

"Let me call him back, sister."

"No, Dave! The small head went up proudly, the pretty face was firm again.

"No, Dave!" Let him come back to me. He ought to know that I don't mean it." But she ran to the gate and leaned far over, peering into the darkness into which he had vanished.

Prudence, the stout, red-faced maid-of-all-work, came from the kitchen waving her rolling pin. The whites of her eyes showed distressingly as she gazed at the sky, in search of the moon.

"Come, Oh come! Out of the hearts of the roses, Silas, my beautiful prince!"

Margie and David gazed at her in consternation.

"Are you crazy, Prue? What are you doing with that rolling pin?"

"That hint no rolling pin." Prue looked at them with reproach in her gaze. "That's a wand—a fairy wand—that I'm waving for my gallant knight."

A rough, drawling voice rent the night air with its nasal tones.

"Poog-ee! Poog-ee! Poog-ee! Say—hor! Say!"

"I can tell you without any wand waving that if you mean Silas, your fatty prince is out there feeding the pigs."

Prue cast a deeper glance of reproach at David.

"My Prints is with the gazettes. What bow! Prints, I come. I come."

Prudence disappeared around the corner of the house as Silas stepped in from the barnyard.

"Hello, Mr. Davie!" He grinned. "Her ye seen my Princess?"

"What Princess?"

"Ash—er—elder?"

"I never heard of any such Princess as Ash—er—elder."

"Oh, yes, ye hev! Ye read me the story about the glass slipper myself. I'm a lookin' for her." He held up a wet board that he had been hiding behind him. "Here's the sole to her slipper."

"Under—ell—er!" His grin grew broader. He turned and stumbled away to the home-made swing. "Beautiful Princess! I come! I come!"

A golden head leaned from the sitting room window. John Maynard's voice called:

"David! David! I want you."

"Yes, father! I'm coming. Will you come in, sister?"

"No, David! Leave me here alone. I want to think.

"Very well, dear." David's grotesque little figure and beautiful golden head disappeared in the old-fashioned doorway, and Margie Maynard sank upon the bench and leaned against the gnarled trunk of the old apple tree. It was a beautiful sight upon which Hamilton Van Cruger looked as he opened the gate softly and strode quietly up the walk. The girlish figure in its youthful allurement and unconscious grace was outlined against the broad, dusky trunk of the tree, against which she leaned. Her bare, full throat shone like a column in the moonlight. Her upturned face, framed in masses of dusky hair was beautiful and eerie as that of some woodland nymph. He surveyed her with gloating eyes. She sprang up, startled, when she heard his voice.

"Ah, here you are, Miss Margie!"

"Mr. Van Cruger, you here?"

"Yes, why should I not stroll out to enjoy the beauties of the moonlight? And I have been fortunate. I have seen the chief beauty?"

"The chief beauty?"

"Yes. She stands before me, the brightest gem the moon shines on to-night."

"You speak sadly, Miss Margie. Has something occurred to make you so gloomy?"

"I am sad, Mr. Van Cruger. I have just had a quarrel with the man I love, and in a fit of anger sent him away."

"The man you love?"

"Yes." Margie looked into the darkness into which Tom Anderson had disappeared. He was so gentle in his great strength, so forgiving to those he loved. Would he not come back? Yes. The man whose wife I was to be on New Year's Day."

"Married!" Cynicism spoke in Hamilton Van Cruger's voice.

"Yes, why not? Most girls marry. Don't they?"

"You married—to someone else—to some countryman!" Van Cruger's voice quivered with real or assumed emotion. "Your exquisite beauty buried upon some lonely farm. You can't mean it, Margie! You don't mean it."

"It was to have been." Margie turned her back to hide her emotion. "But now—I don't know—Oh, if Tom would only come back!"

Hamilton Van Cruger stezed the trembling hand that fluttered tantalizingly near him.

"But now you will do nothing of the sort. You will come to the city with me, shine in its gay circles and be the queen among women you should be."

Margie tried ineffectually to draw her hand away. Her voice was firm, almost stern.

"No, Mr. Van Cruger. I shall marry Tom Anderson, the man I love."

A girl who was walking past stopped as she heard the last words, spoken in Margie's low, distinct voice. Secure in the darkness, the girl leaned upon the gate, her head bent forward in the attitude of one intently listening. She stared and her lips set in a line of pain as a man's voice answered.

"And break my heart? Oh, cruel Margie!"

"Do you care so much as that, Mr. Van Cruger?"

The girl at the gate was one of sorrow.

"Care! Does a man who loves a girl care when he sees her go to another? Of course, I care, Margie, for I love you better than my life."

The girl standing at the gate started again, and her features rose into marble whiteness under the stress of a terrible emotion. She lifted her head and her face softened over so slightly at Margie's answer.

"Then I am sorry for you, more sorry than I can tell, for I love and belong to another."

The three standing in the darkness did not hear the front door open suddenly and quietly close, did not see the gaunt, stern-faced man who stepped out upon the piazza, and stood with head held high, listening.

"And yet you should pity me," Margie's sweet voice fell distinctly upon the listening ears and cut deeply into a heart, as of oak. The voice insensibly went on. "Pity through you I have quarrelled with the man I love. You are the cause of my sorrow, the ruin of my life."

The man upon the piazza staggered back against the wall.

"My God! My child Margie! Ruined! God help me!"

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN. BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a girl twenty years of age and I am deeply in love with a young man of nineteen. I love him very much, but he doesn't know it. I have known him a long time, but I never spoke to him about love. I was in the same city block out of my window. He was married. He used to write to me at all. I wrote a letter to him once and asked him if he thought that I could work in the same place with him, but he did not answer me. Kindly advise me what to do, as I love him very dearly. Shall I write and let him know that I love him?

S. G.

ON no account do anything so foolish. I am afraid that the young man does not return your affection, and am very sorry for you, but your telling him of your love would not better matters. Do be wise about this, or, believe me, you will regret it.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been keeping company with a young man for the last seven months and I love him deeply. I am sure he loves me, as he comes every evening and will do anything I ask him. There is only one thing I have against him, and that is the habit he has of whistling while I am speaking to him. When I tell him about it he always says he won't do so another than the conventional one. I will in no wise hurt him by telling him just exactly the way I feel. Kindly advise.

ONE OF THE SLEEKIES.

YOUR position is certainly a difficult one. I do not know every well brought-up girl is hedged round with conventionalities by her parents or guardians. The only thing for you to do is find a mutual acquaintance you will introduce you.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young lady of twenty years and I have been keeping company with a young man for two years. He has asked me to marry him, but I do not wish to settle down as yet. I love him dearly, so please advise me what to do so I can must dis-owns of hearing your opinion.

H. C. S.

YOU cannot love him very dearly or you would be only too happy to settle down with him. You know a man gets tired of being put off long, so if you wish to marry him at all you had better make up your mind or some other girl will win him away from you.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young lady twenty-two years old. While skating at the Park three weeks ago I met a young man, whom I thought nice to look at. He asked me to skate with him and spent two hours in so doing and then took me as far as my home. Two days later I met him again and he walked four or five squares out of my way with me again. I certainly do love him and how would I let him know it? I do not know his address, his name, and would I stop for him to let him know that I love him?

E. F. M.

IF you have a spark of pride in you you will not let him know that you have fallen in love with him so easily and for so little reason. He has done nothing, as far as I can see, to call forth so much feeling on your part. Don't you know that men seldom value that which comes to them too easily? Wait and let him run after you a bit before you let him see that you care for him. Do take my advice in this.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man twenty years old and am employed as a stenographer at a salary of $8 per week. I was very much in love with a cousin of mine until I met her friend a few days ago, and I do not love my cousin as much as I do her friend. I have reason to believe that my love is returned. Would you advise me to tell my cousin the state of affairs and ask her to release me? Do you think my salary is too small to marry on? The lady is also a strong rusher and would be willing to work for awhile after we are married. The young lady in the office where I work, and most of the girls in the building, are falling in love with me, too. How can I prevent this, as I have to appoint them?

A. J. W.

I THINK you are an extremely conceited young man and in all probability you very much overestimate the powers of your attractions. The girls want to flirt just leading you on, and are not in the least in love with you. Most men, when they ask a girl to marry them, expect to support her.

GOSSIP OF THE SMART SET.

By the Debutante.

Miss Natalie Schenck, whose engagement to a Captain in the British army has just been announced, has probably one of the most beautiful complexions of any young woman in the smart set. She is a beauty of the blond type, with fair hair and blue eyes, but her lovely pink and white coloring may be said to be one of the chief of her attractions. No late hours, no amount of dining and dancing seem to have any effect upon the fresh transparency of her skin, and after two years of winter and summer social dissipation Miss Schenck still has the complexion of a child. She has a skin which is not only remarkable for the delicacy of its coloring but for the fineness of its texture, and the owner of it shows her wisdom and good sense in taking extremely good care of it. Powder, even of the simplest kind, is not to be found in any of the dainty boxes on her dressing table, nor are any of the creams and lotions which are said to be indispensable for the complexion ever used by her. Soap and water, a fine camel's hair brush, the softest of linen towels are Miss Schenck's only cosmetics, and for her, at least, they have wonderful results. When out of doors, however, this wise young woman takes great care that her face and nor sun shall play havoc with her fair skin. Miss Schenck was one of the first young women to adopt the tissue veil and she has been devoted to its use ever since she first took it up. In fact she always goes veiled and frequently her veil of heavy chiffon covers another net of tulle.

THOSE little habits are annoying, but three weeks is not a very long time in which to succeed in breaking oneself of a perhaps life-long habit. Be patient with him and I am sure he will conquer in time.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young lady, just turned my eighteenth birthday, and very fond of a gentleman who is my senior by four years. I am very much interested in him, and would like to meet him, and desiring to further and maintain the acquaintance of this young man, I would very much appreciate your kind advice.

He has often called at the house and taken me out, and is very devoted to me, although he does not deny that he feels sympathetic and likes one other lady friends besides me. I have no objection in reference to same, for I am not engaged to him, but I am sure that he must be aware that such is my estimation I told him he would cut off communications with the other young ladies, but I would not let him know of same until I am positive that he is worthy of my love.

DIMPLES.

UNLESS he is in love with you, and he does not seem to be so, I do not think that he would care to break off his friendship with other girls. I would not advise you to ask him to choose between his friends and you, as he might always resent your doing so, know, that he might prefer to keep the other friends and let you go, and that would be rather mortifying for you. If I were you I would put my "matrimonial views" aside and be satisfied with mere friendship from the young man.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I find that it is no way more difficult for a respectable young man to get acquainted with a countess in my bungarian country than with an honest girl in this town whom you meet day after day in a car or in my case in a department store. Shall I say and ask everybody I know about the lady until I find one who is willing to introduce me? If there is a will—and there is one on both sides, I should say—there is always a way. But sometimes you really overdo things, young people! I will say almost no another than the conventional one. I will in no wise hurt him by telling so long as I remain in the dark as to his advice.

Fireplace Mottoes.

ABOVE the fireplace in a house is usually the motto and if people have any feeling of hospitality for those who enter their home it is one of welcome. Sometimes the motto has some particular significance regarding the family themselves. These are a few that decorate the walls of well-known men:

In Mark Twain's drawing room is one of hospitality, "The ornaments of a house are the friends who frequent it."

"O, ye fire and heat, bless ye the Lord," was the legend above the fireplace at Chauncey Depew's country house at Ardsley.

Andrew Carnegie has an affection for legends of all kinds and descriptions, but they figure mainly in his library—upon the walls, ceilings, sofa pillows and backs of chairs.

Upon the back of a queer leather upholstered chair is painted in gold, "Sit thee down and rest." In his little daughter's nursery, upon a tiny chair, are inscribed the lines, "Love me little, love me long."

Upon the frame of a mirrow nothing can be more suitable than, "Be to my virtues very kind, and to my faults a little blind."

A Woman's as Old as Her Heart.

IT is in her heart that a woman is young or old, and if her heart is youthful a new year always opens full of the brightest possibilities and the old one never closes without leaving behind it sincere regrets for happy days ever to be associated with it. If it had been a sad one try to forget it and begin again realizing all that life holds for you and what you owe to yourself or your loved ones.

What to Do With Your Last Season's Coat.

THE woman with a limited bank account is rejoicing in the possibility of cutting down her skirt coat into the most approved of short jackets. The tailors are having quite a bit of such work to do.

The very plainest of the Spring coats are fanciful little creations. There is such a bewildering display of balloons and bishops, of lace and passementeries from which to choose, that the feminine mind cannot resist some form or another of trimming.

A Jack Horner Pie for Easter.

A JACK HORNER pie is something new for Easter, and the little boy or girl who has her will have one of less fun with it. It is made in the form of a large egg, all in fluffy tissue paper, a tiny ladder leads up to the top of the egg, and on it are perched little yellow chickens. There are more inside. And lots of little gifts filled with candy. Pieces of ribbon are attached to these, and the fun starts when each in turn pulls their gift out of the egg.

Queen Natalie's Rose-Leaf Jam.

ROSE-LEAF jam sounds very pretty, but it is a question whether it would taste as good as it sounds. It is the favorite dish of the beautiful Queen of Servia and never absent from her table. Queen Natalie's villa is a large Eastern looking edifice, and here she entertains and is surrounded by her many friends. She is still a famous beauty—and her wit and intellect have made her one of the most fascinating women of her time.

A True Gentlewoman.

Is always kind.

Never uses slang.

Tries to make others happy.

Never indulges in ill-natured gossip.

Never forgets the respect due to age.

Never swaggers or boasts of her achievements.

Thinks of others before she thinks of herself.

Is not measure her civility by people's bank account.

Does not forget engagements, promises or obligations of any kind.

Is not argumentative or contradictory in conversation, or ridicules the idiosyncracies of others.

Avoids people by telling constantly of herself and family affairs.

Is always kind and agreeable to her social inferiors as her superiors.

Knows the rules of manners—one for "company" and one for home.

Does not call attention by loud talk or laughter or boisterously conversation.

Woman.

FLOWERS spring to blossom where she walks
The careful ways of duty:
Our hard, stiff lines of life with her
Are flowing curves of beauty.

Our homes are cheering for her sake,
Our doorsteps brighter blooming,
And all about the social air
Is sweeter for her coming.

Unspoken homilies of peace
Her daily life is preaching:
The still refreshment of the dew
Is her unconscious teaching.

And never code nor creed than hers
Unlocks the key of selling;
Her guidance is the sick man's ear
Love midst life's trailing.

Her presence lends its warmth and health
To all who come before it.
If woman lost us Eden, such
As she alone restore it.

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

Hearst's Boston American Pattern.

Ladies' Shirt-Waist.

The greatest charm of this pretty and becoming shirt-waist model is the way the fullness is tipped over the shoulder effects as is exemplified in the model shown here. The back is pleated and the fullness under the pleated front is gathered and held in place by the belt. The back, for that is the most difficult part of the waist, is made to give the proper lines. It is fulfilled or tailored by the use of darts and the yoke is of color that comes in contrast with the waist. The sleeves are made in bishop style and display the pretty gathered cuff that distinguishes all of the new shirt-waists. Any other lawings in the deep or shallow square or round effects may be used if preferred. The waist is made with a fitted lining to which the fronts are attached by the use of hooks and eyes. The material required for the medium size (36 inches bust measure) is 3½ yards of 27-inch material, 3 yards of 36-inch material or 2½ yards of 44-inch material. The pattern is cut in sizes for a 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure.

It can be had at this office or will be sent to you if you send 10 cents to cover all cost of handling, etc. All orders should be directed to HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN PATTERN DEPT., 8 Winthrop Square, Boston, Mass.

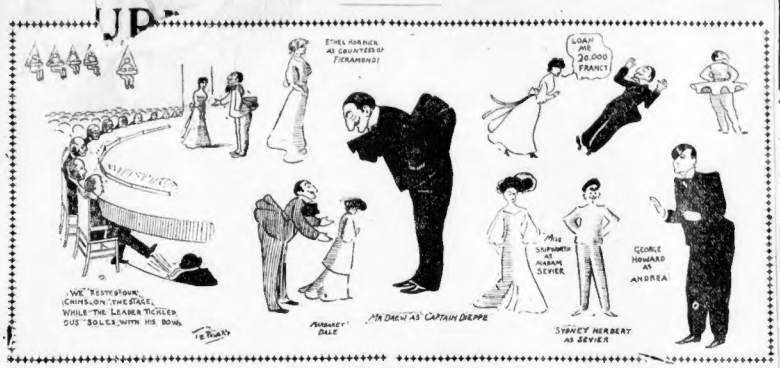
DREW YORK IS BEST IN CAPTAIN DIEPPE



ETHEL HORNICK AS COUNTESS OF FIERAMENDI
LOAN ME 20,000 FRANCS!
WE TESTY FOUR CHINS ON THE STAGE, WHILE THE LEADER TICKLED OUS SOLES WITH HIS BOW.
MR DREW AS CAPTAIN DIEPPE
SYDNEY HERBERT AS SEVIER

JOHN DREW IN "CAPTAIN DIEPPE" AND HIS WONDERFUL COAT

INITIAL PERFORMANCE BROUGHT FASHIONABLE THRONG TO HOLLIS THEATRE.

John Drew, as Capt. Dieppe, began a fortnight's engagement at the Hollis Street Theatre last night. The company played to "capacity," which is to say that there were so many people clamorous to see him that the orchestra had to be put under the stage. It was a representative audience, with "Beacon street," "Brookline" and "Commonwealth avenue" stamped indelibly all over the down-stairs.

The piece, an odd mixture of farce and melodrama, comes from the joint pens of Anthony Hope and Harrison Rhodes. It holds the interest at tension all the time. The stage setting is beautiful.

Of course, in this, as in every other play that he ever appears in nowadays, Mr Drew is a gentleman. "I thank you," he says in the first act, "for allowing me to remain a gentleman." Let us blame heaven. Heaven blames us often enough." As if any one could imagine John Drew anything else.

There comes a time—in the melodramatic moment—when he gets as close to the boundary line that the audience gasps. "I myself have been very nearly a rascal at times," he says, a little later, with the John Drew deprecatory gesture. It is only "very nearly," but it was a close call.

The ladies were altogether charming. Miss Margaret Dale is a most winsome little woman, and she made a great deal of a rather difficult part. The men in the audience didn't blame Capt. Dieppe very much for falling in love with her, even if his supposed husband was his friend. And here is something well worthy of comment. Mr. Drew and Miss Dale took all the curtain calls together. Not once did he come on all alone.

Miss Ethel Hornick and Miss Alison Skipworth, the latter with a part that allowed Capt. Dieppe to turn the tables upon her according to the most approved melodramatic recipe, made the stage beautiful when they were on. Of the men, it might pass to say they were a characteristic Drew company and competent, each with a true conception of the character he was playing.

"Mother Goose" is such a wonderful production that it will please the children as well as their elders.

"THE MEDAL AND THE MAID" SCORES A HIT

James T. Powers and a company of singers and dancers entertained a full house at the Boston Theatre last evening. Fisher and Ryley's production by Owen Hall and Sydney Jones's musical comedy, "The Medal and the Maid," was the vehicle used for the exploitation of over a score of musical numbers and a gamut of gorgeous costumes. The show was enthusiastically received. Mr. Powers got the lion's share, naturally, a fact that was emphasized by a liberal and bewildering display of costumes, four of which were donned and doffed during the first act. His most popular song was "The Man Behind," a lyric that is probably going to be historic.

In Ruth Vincent, the audience found plenty of opportunity to applaud a finished and "fetching" voice and a strikingly winsome personality. In solos, Miss Vincent scored with "My Love I Dare Not Tell," and in a duo number with Miss Englehart, with "A Well-Bred Girl." Miss Carnes made a hit in "Zanzibar," with grotesque chorus. The McCoy sisters danced themselves into popular favor and Stanley H. Forde let out his big bass voice in "Beware of the Brigand Bold" for the accumulation of several encores. "Any Sort of Girl" was sung by Ignacio Martinetti, who did admirably in a difficult French eccentric role.

In brief, "The Medal and the Maid," collectively and individually, made a hit. Nearly every song was encored—most of them doubly—the costumes received much favorable comment and the attractiveness of the chorus—personally and musically—was universally applauded. The show is billed for two weeks.

VIRGINIA EARL IS AS CHARMING AS EVER

"Sergeant Kitty," a new comic opera in two acts, the book and lyrics by R. H. Burnside and the music by A. Baldwin Sloane, received its first Boston presentation at the Globe Theatre, last evening. Virginia Earl headed the company—a generally competent one.

The new opera is tuneful and its style is more reminiscent of the Gilbert and Sullivan period than of the more modern musical comedy. The plot is interesting and the music is catchy.

There was much interest in the reappearance of Miss Earl, who has not been seen in Boston for several years. She proved herself the same favorite as of old, and her piquancy and grace, with her singing abilities, won unstinted applause for her numbers.

The dialogue is clever and the stage well set. Principals and chorus are alike well qualified for their parts. Albert Parr, as Lucien, used an extremely pleasing voice to good effect. The Captain Jonquinieres of Junie McCree was a bright bit of comedy. Sylvain Langlois as General Dubois portrayed the peppery soldier artistically. Of the women, Carrie E. Reynolds, Estelle Wentworth and Grace Belmont most notably assisted Miss Earl in making a success.

"Sergeant Kitty" will be at the Globe for a fortnight.

MOTHER GOOSE BRIM FULL OF SURPRISES

"Mother Goose," as presented by Klaw & Erlanger at the Colonial Theatre, last evening, was brim full of wonderful surprises and side-splitting fun from start to finish.

Such a combination of beautiful spectacle, gorgeous stage settings, pretty women, clever specialties and tuneful music has not been presented to Boston theatregoers for many a day. The effect produced upon the senses by the rapidly changing novelties cannot be described—it must be seen—and even then you merely know you have been pleased, and mightily pleased at that.

The hit of the evening was the song "Laughing Water," rendered by Harry Bulger and twelve young women, dressed in Indian costume, the music of which is so catchy that half the town will be whistling it before the week is out.

Joe Cawthorne as "Mother Goose" was so irresistibly funny without trying to be so that he kept his audience in continuous roars of laughter with his songs and sayings.

A quartette, composed of Messrs. Cawthorne, Bulger, McCarl and Crawford, sang some of the old-time songs, illustrating in a most original manner.

The beautiful posings in mid-air by the [illegible] ballet is the best that has been seen here.

WEBER AND FIELDS MAY HAVE PARTED

NEW YORK, March 22.—According to report generally credited in theatrical circles Joe Weber and Lew Fields have separated. Fields, it is said, signed a contract with Hamlin and Mitchell to star in an extravaganza next season. Joe Weber, it is said, is going to leave the stage altogether and devote his time to managerial duties.

MISS O'NEIL IN THE "FIRES OF ST. JOHN"

Beginning her eleventh week in Boston yesterday afternoon at the Tremont Theatre, Miss Nance O'Neil once more gave her striking and convincing impersonation of Grady of the Brighton district, which gives the estate, which is valued at about $5000, to the children of Mrs. Johnson, who was his landlady.

The will was opposed by Grady's cousins, Mary Brown, Margaret Ford and Michael Murphy.

WHAS IS DOING AT THE OTHER THEATRES

TREMONT THEATRE.

The tuneful "Prince of Pilsen" began its final week at the Tremont Theatre. The audience was of the same size and character as those which have marked the entire engagement, and the favorite numbers were enthusiastically encored.

PARK THEATRE.

"Mrs. Wiggs" and "Lovey Mary," with all the other delightful characters out of Mrs. Rice's book, were again seen at the Park, where "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" opened the third week of its run. The play is as good as the book; that is saying a great deal.

THE MAJESTIC.

Catchy music, bright dialogue and shapely girls assist Nat M. Wills in his act, "A Son of Rest," a very pleasing entertainment at the Majestic. There are nearly a hundred people in the company and you can't laughing at the jokes he is trying to remember the songs.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

It is surprising the amount of furniture, mirrors and electric lights that can be broken in one short act such as "Pals," the headliner at Keith's this week. Hal Davis, Inez McCauley and company appear in this sketch, and the fight that closes the scene is one of the most realistic ever seen on the stage. Annie Abbott is still there, with a host of others.

MUSIC HALL.

Harry Clay Blaney is a model of enterprising newspaper celebrity, as it is seen on the stage, as Willie Live, the reporter, in his play, "Across the Pacific," at Music Hall. The company that supports him is balanced evenly.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Richard Harding Davis knows something about South American revolutions, and his play, "Soldiers of Fortune," which is at the Grand Opera House, is as instructive as it is thrilling. The experiences of three American civil engineers, involved in the throes of a characteristic insurrection, form the basis for the melodrama.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"Under the Gaslight," once made famous by Augustin Daly, is revived by the able stock company at the Castle Square. The railroad scene, which marks a climax in the production, met with great favor last night. The various members of the company do the same careful work for which they are noted.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

"The Brigadiers," at the Lyceum Theatre, present a clean olio and two bright extravaganzas. There is a lot of music, some good dancing and fun galore.

PALACE THEATRE.

"One Night and Gone" is the title of the two-act burletta which is the feature of the "Jolly Grass Widows" show at the Palace. Besides this, there are the usual number of feature acts.

COLUMBIA THEATRE.

Edward Harrigan was never more pleasing than in his own play, "Old Lavender," in which he is appearing at the Columbia. His acting has lost none of its charm, and the company supporting him is adequate.

BOWDOIN SQUARE THEATRE.

The heroine is persecuted and villainy temporarily triumphs, only to be overcome in the end by virtue, to the good, old-fashioned way at the Bowdoin, where the regular stock company is seen in "Saved from the Sea."

AUSTIN & STONES.

Picturesque Scotch bagpipers, midgets, "Mardo the Black Wonder," a sword swallower and many others, nearly forty in all, present a varied and entertaining bill at Austin & Stone's Museum.

THE HOWARD.

"The Third Rail" is the name of the new burlesta at the Howard. The regular company, with some new ones, take part. The vaudeville section of the show is as good as usual.

FIRES BULLET DOWN THROAT OF BURGLAR

Man Finds Intruder Going Over His Jewelry When He Awakes.

NEW YORK, March 22.—Henry Hahn, of No. 430 Wythe avenue, Brooklyn, shot a burglar in the mouth today. The bullet that wounded the man went down his throat.

Hahn was awakened just at daylight and saw the burglar with a bullseye lantern going over his jewelry on the top of the dresser. The burglar's revolver was lying near at hand, and Hahn's revolver was on the top of the mantelpiece, four feet away from the bed. Hahn sprang from the bed, and, seizing his pistol, fired three times. The last shot hit the man in the neck and entered his throat. He was arrested. He said he was James Cain, a sailor.

JOHN DREW IN "CAPTAIN DIEPPE" AND HIS WONDERFUL COAT

INITIAL PERFORMANCE BROUGHT FASHIONABLE THRONG TO HOLLIS THEATRE.

John Drew, as Capt. Dieppe, began a fortnight's engagement at the Hollis Street Theatre last night. The company played to "capacity," which is to say that there were so many people clamorous to see him that the orchestra had to be put under the stage. It was a representative audience, with "Beacon street," "Brookline" and "Commonwealth avenue" stamped indelibly all over the down stairs.

The place, an odd mixture of farce and melodrama, comes from the joint pens of Anthony Hope and Harrison Rhodes. It holds the interest at tension all the time. The stage setting is beautiful.

Of course, in this, as in every other play that he ever appears in nowadays, Mr Drew is a gentleman. "I thank heaven," he says in the first act, "for allowing me to remain a gentleman. Let us blame heaven. Heaven blames us often enough." As if any one could imagine John Drew anything else.

There comes a time—in the melodramatic moments—when he gets so close to the boundary line that the audience gasps. "I myself have been very nearly a rascal at times," he says, a little later, with the John Drew deprecatory gesture. It is only "very nearly," but it was a close call.

The ladies were altogether charming. Miss Margaret Dale is a most winsome little woman, and she made a great deal of a rather difficult part. The men in the audience didn't blame Capt. Dieppe very much for falling in love with her, even if her supposed husband was his friend. And here is something well worthy of comment. Mr. Drew and Miss Dale took all the curtain calls together. Not once did he cross on all alone.

Miss Ethel Hornick and Miss Alison Skipworth, the latter with a part that allowed Capt. Dieppe to turn the tables upon her according to the most approved melodramatic recipe, made the stage beautiful when they were on. Of the men, it might pass to say they were a characteristic Drew company and competent, each with a true conception of the character he was playing.

VIRGINIA EARL IS AS CHARMING AS EVER

"Sergeant Kitty," a new comic opera in two acts, the book and lyrics by R. H. Burnside and the music by A. Baldwin Sloane, received its first Boston presentation at the Globe Theatre, last evening. Virginia Earl headed the company—a generally competent one.

The new opera is tuneful and its style is more reminiscent of the Gilbert and Sullivan period than of the more modern musical comedy. The plot is interesting and the music is catchy.

There was much interest in the reappearance of Miss Earl, who has not been seen in Boston for several years. She proved herself the same favorite as of old, and her piquancy and grace, with her singing abilities, won unstinted applause for her numbers.

The dialogue is clever and the stage well set. Principals and chorus are alike well qualified for their work. Albert Parr, as Lucien, used an extremely pleasing voice to good effect. The Captain Jonquinlere of Junie McCree was a bright bit of comedy. Sylvain Langlois as General Dubois portrayed the peppery soldier artistically. By the women, Carrie E. Perkins, Estelle Wentworth and Grace Redmond most tastefully assisted Miss Earl in making a success.

"Sergeant Kitty" will be at the Globe for a fortnight.

MOTHER GOOSE BRIM FULL OF SURPRISES

"Mother Goose," as presented by Klaw & Erlanger at the Colonial Theatre, last evening, was brim full of wonderful surprises and side-splitting fun from start to finish.

Such a combination of beautiful spectacle, gorgeous stage settings, pretty women, clever specialties and tuneful music has not been presented to Boston theatre-goers for many a day. The effect produced upon the crowded house by the rapidly-changing novelties cannot be described—it must be seen—and even then you merely know you have been pleased, and mightily pleased at that.

The hit of the evening was the song, "Laughing Water," sung by Miss Ida Conquest and twelve young women, dressed in Indian costume, the music of which is so catchy that the town will be whistling it before the week is out.

Joe Cawthorne as "Mother Goose" was so irresistibly funny without trying to be so that he kept his audience in continuous roars of laughter with his songs and sayings.

A quartette, composed of Messrs. Cawthorne, Bulger, McCart and Crawford, sang some of the old-time songs, Hutchinson, in a most original manner.

The beautiful postings in mid-air by the Gr...strupp sisters are really astounding. ...e ballet is the best that has been seen here.

"Mother Goose" is such a wonderful production that it will please the children as well as their elders.

"THE MEDAL AND THE MAID" SCORES A HIT

James T. Powers and a company of singers and dancers entertained a full house at the Boston Theatre last evening. Fisher and Ryley's production by Owen Hall and Sydney Jones's musical comedy, "The Medal and the Maid," was the vehicle used for the exploitation of over a score of musical numbers and a gamut of gorgeous costumes. The show was enthusiastically received. Mr. Powers got the lion's share, naturally, a fact that was emphasized by a liberal and bewildering display of costumes, four of which were donned and doffed during the first act. His most popular song was "The Man Behind," a lyric that is probably going to be historic.

In Ruth Vincent, the audience found plenty of opportunity to applaud a finished and "fetching"—voice and a strikingly winsome personality. In solos, Miss Vincent scored with "My Love I Dare Not Tell," and in a duo number with Miss Englehart, with "A Well-Bred Girl." Emma Carnes made a hit in "Zanzibar," with grotesque chorus. The McCoy sisters danced themselves into popular favor and Stanley H. Forde let out his big bass voice in "Beware of the Brigand Bold" for the accumulation of several encores. "Any Sort of Girl" was sung by Ignatio Martinetti, who did admirably in a difficult French eccentric role.

In brief, "The Medal and the Maid," collectively and individually, made a hit. Nearly every song was encored—most of them doubly—the costumes received much favorable comment and the attractiveness of the chorus—personally and musically—was universally applauded. The show is billed for two weeks.

WEBER AND FIELDS MAY HAVE PARTED

NEW YORK, March 22.—According to report generally credited in theatrical circles Joe Weber and Lew Fields have separated. Fields, it is said, signed a contract with Hamlin and Mitchell to star in an extravaganza next season. Joe Weber, it is said, is going to leave the stage altogether and devote his time to managerial duties.

MISS O'NEIL IN THE "FIRES OF ST. JOHN"

Beginning her eleventh week in Boston yesterday afternoon at the Tremont Theatre, Miss Nance O'Neil once more gave her striking and convincing impersonation of Marie in Sudermann's powerful play, "The Fires of St. John." This afternoon Miss O'Neil is billed for "Camille," Thursday and Friday afternoons she will be devoted to "Judith," a new adaptation of Giacometti's drama, originally written for the great Italian actress, Historia, but never played by her in this country.

WHAS IS DOING AT THE OTHER THEATRES

TREMONT THEATRE.

The tuneful "Prince of Pilsen" began its final week at the Tremont Theatre. The audience was of the same size and character as those which have graced the entire engagement, and the favorite numbers were enthusiastically encored.

PARK THEATRE.

"Mrs. Wiggs" and "Lovey Mary," with all the other delightful characters out of Mrs. Hill's book, were again seen at the Park, where "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" opened the third week of its run. The play is as good as the book; that is saying a great deal.

THE MAJESTIC.

Catchy music, bright dialogue and shapely girls assist Nat M. Wills to make of "A Son of Rest" a very delightful entertainment at the Majestic. There are nearly a hundred people in the company, and what one isn't laughing at the jokes he is trying to remember the tunes.

KEITH'S THEATRE.

It is surprising the amount of funniness, horrors and electric lights that can be broken in one short act such as "Pals," the headliner at Keith's this week. Hal Davis, Inez McCauley and company appear in this sketch, and the fight that closes the scene is one of the most realistic ever seen on the stage. Annie Abbott is still there, with a host of others.

MUSIC HALL.

Harry Clay Blaney is a model of enterprising newspaper audacity, as it is seen on the stage, as Willie Live, the reporter, in his play, "Across the Pacific," at Music Hall. The company that supports him is balanced evenly.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Richard Harding Davis knows something about South American revolutions, and his play, "Soldiers of Fortune," which is at the Grand Opera House, is as instructive as it is thrilling. The experiences of three American civil engineers, involved in the throes of a characteristic insurrection, form the basis for the melodrama.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"Under the Gaslight," once made famous by Augusta Daly, is revived by the stock company at the Castle Square. The railroad scene, by which it is known in the production, met with great favor last night. The various members of the company do the same careful work for which they are noted.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

"The Brigadiers," at the Lyceum Theatre, present a clean cut and two bright extravaganzas. There is a lot of music, some good dancing and fun galore.

PALACE THEATRE.

"One Night and Gone" is the title of the one-act burlesque which is the feature of the "Jolly Grass Widows" show at the Palace. Besides this, there are the usual number of feature acts.

COLUMBIA THEATRE.

Edward Harrigan was never more pleasing than in his own play, "Old Lavender," in which he is appearing at the Columbia. His acting has lost none of its charm, and the company supporting him is adequate.

DOWDOIN SQUARE THEATRE.

The heroine is persecuted and villains temporarily triumphs, only to be overcome in the end by virtue, in the good, old-fashioned way at the Dowdoin, where the regular stock company is seen in "Saved from the Sea."

AUSTIN & STONE'S.

Picturesque Scotch bagpipers, midgets, "Mardo the Black Wonder," a sword swallower and many others, nearly forty in all, present a varied and entertaining bill at Austin & Stone's Museum.

THE HOWARD.

"The Third Rail" is the name of the new burlesque at the Howard. The regular company, with some new ones, take part. The vaudeville section of the show is as good as usual.

FIRES BULLET DOWN THROAT OF BURGLAR

Man Finds Intruder Going Over His Jewelry While He Awaits.

NEW YORK, March 22.—Henry Hahn, of No. 439 Wythe avenue, Brooklyn, shot a burglar in the mouth today. The bullet that wounded the man went down his throat.

Hahn was awakened just at daylight and saw the burglar with a bullseye lantern going over his jewelry on the top of the dresser. The burglar's revolver was lying near at hand, and Hahn's revolver was on the top of the mantelpiece, four feet away from the bed. Hahn sprang from the bed, and, seizing his pistol, fired three times. The last shot hit the man in the neck and entered his throat. He was arrested. He said he was James Cain a sailor.

LEAVES HIS ESTATE TO CHILDREN OF LANDLADY.

Cousins of Brighton Man Vainly Oppose Probate of Will.

Judge McKim of the Suffolk Probate Court has allowed the will of Michael Grady of the Brighton district. The will gives the estate, which is valued at about $5000, to the children of Mrs. Johnson, who was his landlady.

The will was opposed by Grady's cousins, Mary Brown, Margaret Ford and Michael Murphy.

VETERANS TO DINE.

The annual "Veteran" dinner of the Middlesex Club will be held at the Quincy House, Thursday evening. Among the prominent men invited are Lieutenant-General Chaffee, commanding the U. S. A., and Rear Admiral John C. Watson.

EDITORIAL PAGE OF HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN [illegible]Y, 22.

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN.
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.
80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, MARCH 22, 1904.

Boston Outdoes Itself in Its Greeting.

Boston's greeting to HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN was so spontaneous, so generous—so overwhelming in fact, that it is difficult to return thanks. We shall not attempt to do this, but by serving the interests of the public in the future we shall try to show how deeply we feel the obligation under which this newspaper rests and how much it owes to the public.

Never before in the history of journalism was a newspaper born under such auspicious circumstances. Only a few of the many letters and telegrams of greeting could be printed in the first issue because the merchants of Boston had shown their good will by pre-empting so much space that the people from one end of New England to the other might learn the news of Boston's great stores.

The BOSTON AMERICAN on the day of its birth published more advertising than was printed in all the other Boston evening newspapers combined. And the circulation of the AMERICAN was larger than the circulation of all the other Boston evening newspapers combined.

Thus was the greeting complete, for ALL THE PEOPLE WERE REPRESENTED. And as the AMERICAN is the people's paper, and is to be for the people all the time, we not unnaturally feel proud of the way Boston bestowed appreciation.

It will now be the PRIVILEGE AND THE DUTY of the AMERICAN to lead in all battles for the right.

No Black Bread in England, No Yellow Labor in South Africa.

That Rallying Cry of the English Workmen Should Interest American Workers Deeply.

The people of England, especially the workingmen in labor unions, are greatly and properly excited at this moment by British legislation in South Africa.

In a characteristically British way the English government has proved the insincerity of its protestations about the Boer war. The war, according to the English government, was fought for the sake of the Englishmen, the Irishmen, the Americans—for all the civilized white people in the Transvaal.

The Boer government—said the English—would not not give other Europeans a fair chance. Therefore England had to interfere and fight the Boers in the interest of civilization.

That is what England said.

What did England do when the war was over and the Transvaal had been conquered?

The English passed a set of infamous regulations concerning the employment of Chinese labor in the African mines.

Under the arbitrary rulings of the present temporary government [illegible]mary laws are set aside.

The mine owners are permitted to employ practically Chinese slave labor.

The war was supposed to be fought for the benefit of Europeans, downtrodden by the Boers—in order to give an opportunity to the different European nationalities.

And now comes this infamous ruling. The mine owners, clamoring for the cheapest kind of labor, are permitted to import Chinese coolies, to keep them in pens, to work them on a contract basis in actual slavery.

No wonder the people and the workmen in England are excited about this extraordinary display of financial and governmental hypocrisy. No wonder there echoes through England the cry at the head of this column:

"No black bread in England, no yellow labor in South Africa."

The English workmen predict that the introduction of Chinese coolie labor into the Transvaal will soon be followed by its introduction into England.

The South African mine owners, men whose fortunes have been swollen into tens and scores of millions within a few years, were clamoring for cheap labor.

From a seat in the British House of Commons John Burns told the government that the mine owners wanted Chinese labor because they could not force the union labor of England to work cheaply enough.

The mine owners have got their Chinese labor in South Africa, despite of the protests of the people. And, in spite of the Tory sneers about useless alarms, the English workmen are quite reasonable in predicting that the coolie, found useful in the Transvaal, may not long be kept out of England.

He knows well that the arrival of the Chinese coolie means the destruction of wages, the substitution of black bread for white in English homes, and finally the destruction of civilization.

The workers of this country, all labor unions, and all other good citizens interested in the country's civilized development, should be interested in this cry of the English workmen.

The trusts of the United States are planning steadily and persis[illegible]t for their use here the cheap coolie labor of China that is [illegible]y powers within the administration are declaring in favor of [illegible]g the Chinese to enter and work in the Philippines. Unless [illegible] and active protest shall come, the work of the Philippines will [illegible]e by Chinese coolies.

The Americans who do the fighting there will be crowded out that the scheming adventurers of finance may make more money through Chinese labor.

The introduction of Chinese into our Philippine possessions will soon be followed by their arrival at Porto Rico, and finally in the United States.

China is a huge sea of human labor—four hundred millions of yellow slaves, ready to be turned into trust dollars in this country at the opportunity.

In the Chinese coolie the trust owner sees a beautiful, golden, accepting solution of the labor problem.

With Chinese labor even the common stock of the Steel Trust might pay dividends, and the Ship Trust bubbles might solidify into real, golden profits.

The workers of this country will be reminded from time to time this newspaper, as they have been reminded in the past, that the [illegible]ious danger is a danger ever present.

If the trusts continue to increase their hold upon American industry [illegible] American government, [illegible]on need in America some anti-Chinese rallying cry like t[illegible]d of this column.

The Most Be[illegible] Thing A[illegible]oman.

BY H. R. R. HERTZBERG

"Woman's most beautiful trait physically? "Her foot," says my Castilian friend. "Light as the blossom of the almond! Arched like the neck of a grandee's horse! Narrow—more narrow than—ah, than the conscience of an usurer!"

"Bah, it is the figure!" interrupts the Frenchman, impatiently. "The figure, I tell to you! The figure, neat, graceful, rounded but very firm, rhythmic, eh!" and he kisses his hand twice in quick succession.

"Don't you think her color counts for a jolly lot?" comes the Englishman's contribution. "The white and pink of health, you know, and—er—soap, and all that sort of thing. It always looks to me like the sign-patent of a good conscience, when it hasn't been brought from the shop, of course."

"To me her mouth appears most beautiful," remarks the Teuton, who does not wear glasses—which is original and praiseworthy of him. I'm sure—"that mouth which is kind, and soft, and honest, and capricious, and mocking, and serious by turns, and kissable at all times. Incidentally, not the least creditable quality of that mouth consists in knowing how to order a well-appointed dinner."

"Pity on him!" cries the Hungarian. "There goes your German—always he must have it something to eat! Always!" "But I," he continues, "I vote for the hair. Black, golden, red, what matters it, if only it be long and wavy, and silkier than milk from the Chinese Emperor's private cocooneries. Sunlight in threads or floss from the mantle of night! The hair, I say!"

It is the Norseman's chance to speak. He doesn't talk. He makes statements:

"What is finer than her forehead? You have seen windows of milk-white glass, my friends. You can't see through them, yet the pure light on the other side shines unmistakably. So does a fair, good woman's brow impress me. You can't see through it—but the light of purity streams out to you, and makes you glad and very worshipful."

"There's the chin with a dimple in it," now argues the Irishman. "The brave, round little chin, with a tendency to square up when trouble comes. The sort of chin that stands for honesty and faith, with humor in between 'em, all three of 'em proud o' the company they keep; I know a girl," says the Irishman, and then he says nothing more.

"What's the matter with the ear?" inquires the man from the Highlands. "The little cross between the petal of a blushrose and the inside of a shell, that becomes a wee bit rosier still when ye're whispering foolish words in it? We-el, why shouldn't a Scotchman be a fool like the rest of ye?" The last sentence is said by way of anticipative defence.

The Neapolitan has given various distress signals of impatience. He lands on the heels of the Scotchman's declaration in a rush:

"Cospetto! is it possible?" he asks, of heaven and earth. "Is it possible that not one—not one of you all—has lifted his voice in behalf of the eye? The eye, signori! A woman's eye is the woman! With it she converses, she listens, she sings, and inspires, she torments, she loves! The eye! Do you know what it is? The eye of a woman? It is heaven, signori, heaven with lashes on it!"

And still the American man has not enounced a syllable. He speaks now as he rises to go:

"You're all right, every one of you, and you're wrong, equally. The most beautiful thing about woman is everything about her, when she is beautiful!"

The Child in Mourning.

THAT child in mourning is a sadder thing
Than all the elegies which poets sing.
'Tis an assault on Nature (brutal, bad!)
Who meant that children should be wholly glad.

If only there existed a bank for the cashing of dream-checks, wouldn't this be a world of billionaires!

Strange that we, who wouldn't trespass on our neighbor's property for anything, will trespass on their privacy without the slightest hesitation.

Truth and poetry are not irreconcilable. For instance, whenever a poet makes rhymes about his poverty it's the truth.

Talk of idealism versus materialism! One onion can fetch more tears than ten tragedies.

Are Your Lungs White or Black?

BY HERBERT N CASSON.

If you ever have a chance to go to the museum in connection with the Edinburgh University, at which Andrew Carnegie is Lord Rector, or Chief Ranger, or something of the sort, you will see some strange objects in a glass case that will do more to teach you the value of fresh air than all the books that were ever written.

Last year a professor secured the lungs of an Esquimau, a Londoner and a coal miner. He has had them preserved with some kind of a chemical process, and they are now side by side in a glass case. The Esquimau's lungs are pure white; the Londoner's lungs are a dirty brown; and the coal miner's lungs are jet black.

The Esquimau had kept his lungs clean, not because he knew more about breathing than the Londoner or the coal miner, but because he lived in a land of snow fields and spent his time in the open air. It is a curious fact that every Esquimau who is brought to our large cities dies of consumption in a few years.

All of us who run up and down in the skyscraper canyons of New York or Chicago or Boston have no chance to breathe the dustless, germless air of Greenland or Alaska. The whitest pair of lungs in an American city will be at least a dozen shades darker than the hue of a lily.

In a large city our fresh air, like our fresh eggs, might be fresher. Therefore it is much necessary to make the best use of what we have. When our fresh air is stale, what must our stale air be?

There is a young man in a Broadway clothing house who takes his watch regularly, once a year, to the jeweller's, so that it will always be in good condition. Yet this young man is in the first stages of consumption, and he is not taking any steps to escape from the deadly "white plague."

He could buy another watch with a week's salary, but in two years he will need a new pair of lungs, and all the money in the world will not buy them.

You must not think that this young man is an unusually stupid specimen. The fact is that he is like half of the men and women in New York City—he pays less attention to his lungs than to his watch or his piano or his bicycle.

To breathe stale air is just as bad for the wonderful machine which we call the lungs as it would be to drop a pinch of dust in your watch, or to empty the button bag into the piano or to throw a spadeful of ashes over a bicycle.

Some of the greatest men in the world have had consumption, but most of them have had the sense and the will power to cure themselves. Napoleon, Goethe, Von Moltke, Emerson and Cecil Rhodes are five cases of cure.

Now, it is easy for a doctor or a writer to say, "If you have weak lungs go to the mountains or live outdoors all day long." But it is not so easy for others to take this advice. In thousands of cases it is impossible.

There might just as well be a Fresh Air Trust so far as some wage workers are concerned. The only chance they get to walk in the open air is when they lose their jobs, and then they are not usually in the right frame of mind to enjoy the walk.

But there is one thing that every one can do—keep the windows open at night. For eight hours a day you sleep. If you keep your windows open a few inches and let a current of air blow through your bedroom you will be doing the right thing for at least one-third of the time.

In fact, Professor Biermer calls consumption a "bedroom disease." As long as people live and sleep in egg-box tenements, with all the windows shut tightly against the air that feeds them, there are no doctors, and no writers and no medicines that can cure them.
